Lesser Grain Borer Said Found in State
Salem—(U.P.)—E. P. Larson, a surveying entomologist for the State Agriculture Department, reported today that the lesser grain borer, a serious pest of stored grain in the southern states, had been found in Oregon.

Larson said borers were found in barley stored in several Linn county feed mills and also in Yamhill county.

The pest was identified by Dr. Melville H. Hatch of the University of Washington, a beetle specialist.

Larson said the grain beetle may or may not prove important in Oregon although the two infestations found recently were quite severe. The insect bores into grain kernels and feeds on the insides.
