University Women To Give New Graduate Fellowships

Washington, D.C.—A bequest estimated at $300,000 will be used by the American Association of University Women to establish a number of new graduate fellowships for women, it was announced today by the Association's fellowship endowment trustees. The new fellowships will range from $3,000 to $3,500, according to the AAUW fellowship awards committee.

The bequest is part of a $4,500 estate left by Miss Shirley Farr of Brandon, a long-time member of the association. It is the largest single gift to the fellowship endowment fund, which now totals $1,372,645, the fellowship trustees announced. The market value of the fund, they said, is now over $1,800,000.

Miss Farr, who died at her Vermont home last August at the age of 74, played a prominent part in AAUW affairs in the twenties and thirties. She served on a number of national committees and was active in the establishment of the association's present Headquarters at 1634 Eye street, N.W. in Washington, D.C. Her interest in the AAUW program of furthering research and study by women scholars was also evidenced by her generous support of the Mary E. Woolley fellowship of the North New England unit of the association.

In the past twenty-five years, nearly two million dollars has been awarded in fellowships and international grants by the AAUW. These funds have come from income on the endowment fund as well as from yearly contributions by the members.

The AAUW fellowship program has been in operation since

Banjo Returning To Favor Again

Turn your ear to musical America today and you'll hear a happy sound that dimmed to nearly nothing for some 25 years—the cheerful plunkety-plunk of the banjo. This long-necked instrument with a tambourine-like body seems to be recapturing its place in the hearts of Americans.

Proof that the banjo is back to stay can be found in the increasing number of amateur groups springing up around the country, says the American Music Conference.

The five-stringed banjo, once called the American banjo, is native to this country. Most authorities agree that the distinctive instrument was brought from Africa to America by Negroes, who probably first picked up the idea from the Arabians. The name "banjo" is probably derived from "bandore" or "pondura," an old musical stringed instrument resembling the lute or guitar, and is, of course, a member of the guitar family.

Banjoes made their first big impression on the American scene in the last part of the 19th century when minstrel shows toured the country. From minstrel time to ragtime and jazz was only a short hop and skip for the banjo. In the 1920's the instrument began keeping company with trumpets, clarinets, trombones and pianos.

Today's boom in banjos is taking several directions and the banjo manufacturers say that their sales have doubled in the last six months. College boys have taken to banjo playing and the instrument is currently being used in television commercials and in recordings of hit tunes.

All in all, it seems that the banjo has come back with a re-sounding plunkety-plunk.

CORNET GAL

Russell, Kan. — (U.P.) — Judy Mills, a high school senior whose music career began with a teacher's advice to steer clear of the cornet, will play that instrument in an all-America band. She is one of two Kansas selected to play at the golden anniversary conference of music educators at St. Louis, Mo., in April.

A pound of oranges will make a cup of juice on the average.

Speaker Named For Rose Society

Mrs. Kenneth C. Farley will be featured speaker for a meeting of Medford Rose society to be held Monday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. in the county courthouse auditorium.

Mrs. Farley will speak on care and preparation of roses for the growing season ahead. Various committee reports will be given by chairmen including a report on advance planning for the second annual rose show which will be held June 2 in the senior high school cafeteria. Those planning to enter roses for exhibit in this show should have their roses pruned now if they haven't already done so, it is stated.

Five plants of "The Texan," a red grandiflora rose donated by Howards of Hemet, will be auctioned. Proceeds will go to the American Rose foundation.

Anyone interested in growing roses and who would like to learn more about their care and culture is welcome to attend the meeting or to join the society and participate in its program.
