Russian Georgians March on Capitol

New York—(U.P.)—Thousands of Russian Georgians, angered by the defamations of Stalin, marched on the capitol government headquarters at Tiflis during a three-day demonstration early this month, according to a report received by the National Broadcasting Company.

NBC's Helsinki correspondent, Paul Sjoebium, received the report from Finnish concert pianist Tapani Valsta who was in Tiflis for a concert when the news of Communist party chairman Khrushchev's attack on Stalin's memory reached there.

Sjoebium quoted Valsta as saying: "These demonstrations lasted night and day for three days, but police kept out of it. I saw no soldiers around either."

"It was very noisy, but I saw no violence, no riot. In Moscow I heard of many people who were killed. But I do not believe it."

Around Hollywood

Hollywood—(U.P.)—Penny Edwards, the beauty who gave up movies for religion two years ago, today is back at work in television.

I found the new Penny different from the actress who was starred in 26 films before she took up religion. She no longer has bright blonde, long hair. Her locks are darker and shorter. She refuses to take "evil" roles or pose for leg art in films.

Normal Look Desired
"As far as makeup and costumes for roles go, I believe in moderation," she explained. "I just want to look normal."

Penny insists that by returning to show business she doesn't feel like a person who is given a farewell party and then never leaves. Nancy Valentine and June Haver also left society for religious seclusion, but returned.

"I definitely intended to quit movies two years ago," she said. "I am very sincere about my religion. I don't feel I've changed my mind. I think I've grown in my religion with a better understanding of people and the world."

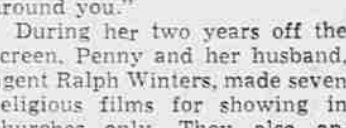

"After a time I became convinced it is entirely possible to live and work in Hollywood and still have God first in my life. If you love God you don't have to do the evil things you see around you."

During her two years off the screen, Penny and her husband, agent Ralph Winters, made seven religious films for showing in churches only. They also appeared on religious TV programs.

They gave sermons at churches, held bible classes in their home three nights a week and toured the country to give
