Protocol Rules of Capital Troublesome to Newcomers

By PATRICIA WIGGINS United Press Correspondent

Washington—(U.P.)—Mrs. John D. Dingell, Jr. newest member of the congressional wives corp., says she has decided to take a "restrained approach" to the rules of protocol faced by capital novices.

Even so, it's not easy. Her husband, who was elected to succeed his late father, is the "baby" of the house in age—he's 29. The Michigan Democrat also is the "baby" in terms of service. That's where protocol comes in.

The rules say that new members of the House—lowest on the protocol totem pole except for assistant secretaries—must "call" on members of the Supreme Court, the cabinet, senators, and all members of the House.

That's a total of 549 calls. Mrs. Dingell said she didn't see how any wife could manage them all. Especially with an 18-month-old son to care, plus the making of drapes and slipcovers for a new apartment.

"I understand there are different ways of approaching the whole Washington situation," Mrs. Dingell said in an interview. "Some people treat it as a religion—I plan to make my approach fairly restrained."

The attractive brunette first saw the protocol rules spelled out in a Congressional Club directory, published by wives of congressmen.

The booklet says that "since it is practically impossible for a newcomer to make all official calls, it is suggested that the essential ones would include, in addition to the White House, the wife of the vice president, wife of the speaker, the women of her own state delegation (Michigan has 20) and the wives of chairmen and ranking members of her husband's committees."

Even the accepted custom of leaving cards is a time-consuming task for those without chauffeurs to do the leaving—another common practice.

Mrs. Dingell said she hasn't tackled the social calls yet, but she has joined the Congressional club, the Democratic Women's forum and plans to join the
