Postal Department
Willing To Make
Applicants Known

Washington (U.P.)—The Post Office Department has backed down on its insistence that the names of persons eligible for postmaster appointments be kept secret, it was disclosed today.

The action is the latest victory for a House Government Operations Subcommittee headed by John E. Moss (D-Calif.) which has been protesting the suppression of public information by federal agencies.

Post Office Department solicitor Abe McGregor Goff, in a letter to Moss, said the department had withdrawn its request to the Civil Service Commission to keep the names secret "since you feel so strongly about the matter."

It was not immediately known, however, whether the Civil Service Commission would take the secrecy wraps off, and whether the Post Office Department itself would make the lists public.

McGregor had testified last November that the department would not back down because publication of the names would "embarrass" applicants and discourage good men from seeking the jobs.

The secrecy label was slapped on the so-called register of eligible applicants by the Civil Service Commission at the request of Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield in 1953. The names had previously been made public.

Applicants Selected

The Civil Service Commission, on the basis of an examination, selects the three top-ranking applicants for a postmaster job. From this three-man list, or "register," one is chosen by the President, with the consent of the Senate, for the job. It was this three-man list that Summerfield kept secret.

Civil Service Commission Chairman Philip Young testified that he was keeping the list secret by request of Summerfield. Young said it was up to Summerfield to say whether to make it public or not.
