Hollywood

By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood—(UPI)—Life has been quiet in the big, blue CBS building on Sunset Boulevard where old-fashioned radio still marches on. But lately a "new" program has created an up-
roar.

Studio B is cluttered with weird sound effect equipment. . . bright-eyed actors hustle about. . . fan mail is pouring into the front office.
CBS has revived "The Columbia Workshop," and it's giving radio its most stimulating boost since TV swept in and grabbed the spotlight.

The workshop was started in 1936 to put on experimental, arty, weird and sometimes downright looney radio programs. Orson Welles' "Man From Mars" was one.

TV Version Fails
The series was dropped in 1942 and revived for a year in 1946. An attempt to put it on TV in 1952 failed. The network exhorted the idea and launched a new radio workshop series Jan.
27 with Aldous Huxley's
"Brave New World."

Tonight the workshop presents a story about a hi-fi set that goes berserk and tunes in on the neighbor's conversation.
In workshop tradition, the presentation will be unusual for "the enormous radio." Instead of background music, listeners will hear murmuring voices of the neighbors.

Today producer-director William Frogg happily sifted through raving fan letters in his office—which, with its mobile and modern paintings, is as
"avant garde" as the show.

Program Revived
"CBS decided to revive the program to get people to talk about radio again," he said.
"Money can't be made on it. It never can be sold to a sponsor or then it wouldn't be experimental any more."

"William Saroyan wants to do a show for us. Orson Welles might do a 30-minute monologue of a man talking to a hawk.
Ernest Borgnine also is interested."

Frogg's rule is that workshop scripts must have a point of view, and he shows that could not be done any place else. Another future program: The story of Cinderella, acted the traditional way and then done in the realistic, Actor's Studio-Marlon Brando style. Frogg also plans to dramatize "Winnie the Pooh."

PREFERRED JAIL
Milford, Conn.—(UPI)—Mrs.
Doris E. Gagnon spent three nights in jail rather than pay a $1 ticket for illegal parking.
Mrs. Gagnon could have gone free under a $5 bond pending a court appearance, but she refused saying she was "innocent."
