Bass Nibbling Off Ducks' Feet

Oswego — (U.P.) — Residents here said today that largemouth bass apparently are nibbling on young ducks in Lake Oswego.

They reported that ducks were seen minus one or both feet. Game commission biologists said that it was improbable that carp were feeding on the ducklings but said largemouth bass often did so.

The game commission said it wasn't practical to poison the lake to rid it of trash fish as they would re-enter from the Tualatin river by the canal that feeds the lake. The commission also said that the lake is privately owned and policy does not permit spending public funds in such waters.

Here is your opportunity to step into Ron Malcolm's shoes behind the camera, grinding away at 1200 pounds of infuriated moose. Your guide has antagonized the approaching bull by grunting like another bull on the prod. The bull answers the challenge and heads your way, warily, watchful—and ready for a fight. At 30 feet he hesitates, moves on in to 20 feet, stops . . . looks you over. He's so close you can see the reddish glare in his hate filled eyes — He's mad . . . and ready. His next move brings him on a tangent, within 12 feet of the camera lens. The guide and your partner stand motionless and tense, watching and hardly breathing — waiting, with fingers on triggers. Would the maddened bull charge? . . . They have him covered, but a sudden rushing charge MAY come at any second—
