Scientists Study Physics Principle

Buffalo, N. Y.—(U.P.)—Scientists at the University of Rochester are studying a new physics principle which might enable them to increase the capacity of the university's cyclotron — now one of the largest in the United States.
Dr. Robert E. Marshak, chairman of the school's physics department, announced that a $46,000 grant from the Atomic Energy Commission would be used this year to study the feasibility of obtaining higher energies and higher currents from the school's 130-inch cyclotron.
Dr. Marshak explained that a new principle, called fixed field alternating gradient (FFAG) focusing, might make it possible to increase beam currents produced by the cyclotron.
