MORE YOUTHS ARRESTED

Oklahoma City—(U.P.)—Fewer adults but more juveniles were arrested in Oklahoma in 1955. Buck Cook, state commissioner of charities and corrections, said 5,614 juveniles were arrested, about 10 per cent more than the previous year. Adult arrests totaled 95,128, a decline of about 18 per cent from 1954.

Talent Firm Granted SBA Disaster Loan

A business loan of $115,000 to Skeeters and Skeeters, Talent logging company, has been approved by the Small Business administration, according to John G. Barnett, branch manager, Portland.

He said the administration has approved 43 business loans amounting to $2,403,500 and 58 disaster loans amounting to $805,450 since SBA activities began in the Portland district.

Of the 54 applications received from the southern Oregon disaster area, 42 have been approved, four declined, three withdrawn and five are being processed.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Hope for the Short Boy Who Does Not Grow Tall

Many worried parents ask me what to do for a boy who is not growing. Usually I suspect that either one or both of his parents are short, and the boy has inherited a gene which tends to restrict growth. Until recently, I knew of no available drug likely to make much difference. A few men have reported some results from the use of tiny amounts of vitamin B12.

Walter Alvarez

One thing all parents of short boys should remember; and this is that not much growth can be hoped for after the age of 16 or 17, when the leg bones have grown as long as they can ever grow.

For years I have been hoping that the growth hormone of the pituitary gland (at the base of the brain) isolated years ago by my old friend, Professor Herbert Evans, would be completely purified and then secured in commercially available amounts. Now I see in an article by Dr. K. A. Baird, of Canada (Amer. Practitioner and Digest of Treatment, Feb. 1956) that the antuitrin growth hormone, when injected, caused two short girls to shoot up in a striking way.

Years ago Dr. Evans showed me some great big hound-like dogs which he had made out of little dachshunds with the help of the growth hormone.

Natural Resistance To Infection

There is much that we physicians would like greatly to know about the great resistance of many animal and human bodies to infections of various kinds. For instance: We do not know why a hen can remain unharmed after receiving a dose of lockjaw poisoning that would quickly kill a man. We do not know why a rat is immensely more resistant to many diseases than is a guinea pig. We do not know why an individual throughout a long life can be almost immune to infections—even colds—when other persons are always coming down with the colds and fevers that are going the rounds.

How do wild animals of Africa live and thrive in the presence of biting flies that would promptly kill off imported animals? Why are some varieties of a plant highly resistant to disease when others are not? Naturally, research physicians wish that they could find and identify and use as medicines the substances in nature that account for the several marked general immunities to infections.

Recently, a number of scientists, meeting under the auspices of the New York Academy of Sciences, heard reports about a substance called properdin, which was discovered in August 1954 by a group of investigators working in Cleveland, under the direction of Dr. Louis Pillemer. Not all of the men at the meeting were convinced of the significance of properdin but many facts about it are encouraging.

It is good that, at last, a concerted effort is being made to attack this problem of what supplies certain type of strong immunity. If it were not for this type of immunity a large percentage of the people on earth might be wiped out within a week. Interestingly, this immunity cannot be explained by the presence of any known antibodies or by the actions of the white corpuscles in our blood. There are other factors, and these we must now search for and find.

Let Us Not Worship Tests

All my life as a teacher, I have been suggesting to my medical brethren that more often we stop and scrutinize the result of some test, especially when it does not fit with other facts about the patient. I remember so well a powerfully-built, unusually healthy and athletic and young-for-his-years executive who was retired by his company when a pessimistic physician thought he saw alarming deviations from normal in the fellow's electrocardiogram. This was 15 years ago and recently I heard that the man is still working actively and well — for another company.

I will never forget a lesson I got during World War I when, on examining a recruit, I found a loud heart murmur, from a congenital defect, a big enlarged heart, and a high blood pressure. The man would have been rejected for almost any job by any company physician anywhere. Imagine my surprise when the fellow told me he was earning his living as a six-day bicycle racer! Evidently, the small defect that produced the big murmur had not greatly handicapped his heart. Perhaps the enlargement of his heart muscle had made it strong enough to handle the tremendous overload that comes with bicycle racing.

I am reminded of many cases like this by comments made recently at a convention by Dr. Joseph B. Wolffe, a professor of medicine and heart consultant in Philadelphia who has been making a particular study of the hearts of athletes and Marathon runners. He told of powerful track men who were found to have signs of heart disease so marked that many physicians would have felt inclined to put them to bed! As Professor Wolffe said, obviously we doctors must revise some of our ideas about the measurement of physical fitness.

Dr. Alvarez regrets he hasn't the time in which to read or answer requests for information.

We wonder about the telephone call that says, "This is a national television survey. Do you have your set turned on?"

They don't care if you're looking at it. They just want to know if it's on.
