

Miss Kelly Prince Honored at Ball; Cameramen Fight

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent
Monaco — (UP) — Prince Rainier and Grace Kelly parted into the early hours today at a lavish $100,000 ball marred by a vicious fistfight between photographers and Monegasque police.

Today Miss Kelly and the prince planned a final day of rest before the straining grind of last minute festivities leading to their civil wedding ceremonies Wednesday and their religious marriage Thursday.

The Prince's press relations official was wrestling with problems of discontented news photographers who boomed when Miss Kelly and the Prince emerged from the high society soiree.

The police-photographer fight broke out when the Prince and Miss Kelly, 45 minutes late, drove up long after the other guests had entered the Monte Carlo Sporting club for the festivities.

Photographer Pushed

A photographer of the French newspaper Temps de France was slightly pushed by one policeman and shoved into another policeman broke his camera.

The photographer shouted protests and a fight ensued between him and two other policemen. Other photographers waded in to aid their colleagues and soon 20 to 30 persons were involved. No injuries of consequence were reported.

Rainier and Miss Kelly scurried inside the building when the disturbance started.

To Say "Oui"

Officials announced meanwhile that Miss Kelly will say "oui" instead of "yes" during the wedding ceremonies. The service will be conducted in French.

The glittering party was the biggest of the pre-wedding festivities.

Miss Kelly was a picture of fragile loveliness in pale blue with a satin stole. She was the most simply dressed woman in the ballroom where female guests were weighed down by glistening jewels and expensive furs. She wore her hair in the loose pageboy bob the Prince likes.

Sunday Concert Ends Season For Philharmonic Orchestra

The Philharmonic Society of Southern Oregon brought the 1955-56 concert season for Medford to a close yesterday afternoon with a concert at Medford Senior High school—a concert which left those interested in the welfare of this group with the belief that the season has been a satisfactory and rewarding one. An audience of about 600 attended the performance and applause was enthusiastic.

The concert was not only a triumph for Conductor Richard D. Werner and his musicians, but a triumph for Sylvania DeVoss, coloratura soprano. This was the first appearance of Mrs. DeVoss in a major program in the valley, and she delighted her listeners.

Mrs. DeVoss has a soprano voice of great sweetness and purity, and she knows how to sing. One can also add to this the fact that she is attractive and has an engaging stage personality. Mrs. DeVoss' best numbers yesterday were the Haendel "My Beloved," in which she was accompanied by the orchestra, and Rimsky Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun" from "La Coq D'Or," with piano accompaniment by Bruno Pellagrini. Her voice and temperament are apparently less suited to a number such as the "Carmena Waltz Song," and the smoothness of "Sing, Smile, Slumber," in which Delmar Myres played the flute obbligato, was marred slightly by a miscue among the three musicians.

This reviewer hopes that Mrs. DeVoss continues to live in the valley and to share her talent with music lovers here. Conductor Richard Werner and the orchestra deserve high praise for their performance of the beautiful "Unfinished Symphony" of Schubert. In this number the orchestra began to show the degree of excellence which earlier performances this season promised. The string section, as has been mentioned before, is particularly fine and performed to good advantage yesterday in the Schubert number, major offering of the program.

The concert opened with the overture from "The Marriage of Figaro" and between the soloists' two groups, two operatic numbers were performed. Because of a printing error, the programming on these was reversed and Conductor Werner chose to play them in the order which had been planned, rather than as they appeared on the leaflet. This produced minor confusion which may have added to the feeling that the two were played with less finesse and musicianship than the symphony.

Verdi's stirring "Grand March" from the opera "Aida" closed the program.

Adding to the pleasure of the afternoon was a post-concert party given by members of the Philharmonic guild for the orchestra, the husbands and wives of the musicians and a number of other guests. A buffet supper was served and the group lingered long over the coffee cups to discuss the season just closed and others to come.

It is of interest to note that plans have tentatively been made to repeat this last concert in Ashland. This would serve the double purpose of providing a fine program of music for Ashlanders unable to come to Medford yesterday, and adding to the music scholarship fund which is being set up by the orchestra and guild.—O.S.
