Candidates Speak At Luncheon Meeting Of Republican Women

Jackson County Republican Women heard GOP candidates seeking nomination in the coming primary election outline their platforms and political theories at a luncheon meeting yesterday noon in the YMCA. About 125 persons attended, and Mrs. Wayne Stine, program chairman, introduced candidates.

State Sen. Phil Lowry, first to speak, substituted for Al Littrell, candidate for reelection to the House of Representatives from this district since Littrell was attending a highway committee meeting.

Lowry praised Littrell's record for his first session and called him a man of "great integrity and real diligence." Lowry urged his audience not to "overlook" the coming election in an overriding interest in national politics and stressed the importance of Republican control of the Oregon legislature.

State Rep. E. H. Mann, also seeking reelection, echoed Lowry's speech in praise of Littrell's record and spoke of the advantage of returning men to the legislature because their experience and seniority is considered in making committee appointments. Mann said he has served under three governors during which time more than 4,000 pieces of legislation have been considered.

Allen D. Curry, seeking the nomination for county assessor, outlined his Medford background and spoke of his many years in the county tax department and with the city of Medford. He served the city as an office manager in the water department and as city police judge. Curry said he would "make no promises except to fairly hear all grievances" if elected.

Stresses Experience
Also seeking the assessor's nomination is John H. Tizzecker. Tizzecker stressed his experience earned as an employee in the tax collector's office and said because of this he could serve the county's taxpayers with "efficiency and impartiality."

Wait Nunley, seeking reelection as district attorney, emphasized that he has definite theories and philosophies of government for which he offers no apologies and which he will not change. Nunley said he had little idea of whether or not his management of the district attorney's work had pleased voters, but that he was seeking reelection on the basis that he would continue the office as it had been during his first term. He spoke of the valuable experience he had gained during this term.

Following Nunley was George Rode, Medford attorney also seeking the nomination for district attorney. Rode, after briefly outlining his education and law experience, said ideas and theories were "all right" but that for the office of district attorney these were not enough; that competency in office is what counts. Rode outlined four points to back up his charge of incompetency in the present administration of the district attorney's office. He charged that the office had raised taxes by increasing the budget from the $4,625 needed in 1951-52 to $17,411 for 1955-56, an increase of almost 400 per cent; that the office was low in morale and efficiency, with the district attorney hiring six deputies in three years; that the office is "chaotic and haphazard" in its enforcement of criminal laws, resulting in the thwarting of simple justice, and that the present administration had undermined the civil liberties of accused persons by causing them to be arrested at unusual hours, by interrogating them in an unlawful fashion and supplanting thoroughgoing investigation with mere obtaining of confessions.

L. G. Morthland, who has already served two terms as county commissioner and who is seeking reelection, spoke of the many duties which the commissioners have to perform, reviewed the many committees on which he serves and pointed to his record as a "conservative" in money matters.
County Commissioner Melvin J. Lattie, seeking the nomination for county commissioner, said he is dissatisfied with the tax situation in Jackson county and believes it could be remedied. He said county taxes had "increased 100 per cent in one short year" and that these increases were unjustified. Lattie spoke in considerable detail of the building of the courthouse annex, which he said is referred to around the county as "that monstrosity," added that it had cost much more than the original estimate, and that it is badly planned with elevators which do not serve all floors and false ceilings to hide poorly planned plumbing installation. He said taxes could be reduced without "hurting" county employees.

Mrs. Anna Scott, candidate for the office of treasurer, reviewed the duties required of the treasurer and outlined her past experience as an accountant and as assessor and clerk in another Oregon county, saying she felt this experience qualified her as treasurer.
Rynning Talks
Paul Rynning, many years engineer of Jackson county, gave the briefest talk of all saying he had long served the county and "voted Republican and save the nation."

The meeting closed with brief talks by Judge Rodney Keating, Robert Dickey, Mrs. Frank Bash, William McAllister and Robert Elliott, all seeking election as delegates to the coming Republican convention.
Mrs. Robert J. Keeney, president, conducted the meeting and Mrs. McAllister gave the invocation.

Farm Bureau Backs Eisenhower's Veto

The powerful American Farm Bureau Federation backed President Eisenhower's farm bill veto today. But other cornbelt farm leaders said it will cost the Republicans votes.

The national farmers organization, forerunners in the fight for 100 per cent of parity price supports, said the veto "will bring disillusionment to the entire farm belt at a time when some hopes had been held forth."

The national Grange was already on record in favor of the vetoed bill and a North Dakota leader of the National Farmers Union, Glenn Talbott, predicted the veto "will lead to a drastic political revolution against the GOP."

Many Midwest Republican governors, such as Indiana's George Craig, praised Mr. Eisenhower for vetoing the bill. But in Iowa, where most GOP leaders backed the bill, some Republican leaders said they were sorry over the President's decision.
