Around Hollywood
By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood—(U.P.) — The new Marilyn Monroe is surpassing even Greta Garbo as the hardest person to see in Hollywood.

America's favorite blonde is back wiggling for the cameras for the first time since she struck out for freedom a year and a half ago.

She took a
"realistic" acting lessons at Marlon Brando's alma mater, the Actors' Studio in New York. She became a producer and acquired intellectual friends.
But to find out whether la Monroe has changed is tougher than wangling a front seat at Grace Kelly's wedding. Marilyn has been in and out of a sick bed, reminiscent of Judy Garland's ailments on "A Star is Born." And when she is well enough to act on her movie set, as on the day I dropped in, she is shielded by her new-found aides.

"She can't be interviewed on the set," explained famed Broadway director Josh Logan, picked by Marilyn to guide her through her come-back film.
Mind Cleared

"We have to get a performance," he said. "I can't have her thinking of anything else before the scene. And we have an important close-up next."

While Marilyn rested in her closed dressing room, I asked her co-workers whether she had changed.

"She has more peace of mind than before," Logan reflected.
"When she was frightened and insecure, her talent didn't come out. Now she is more secure because of her position in the world. She is one of the greatest talents I've ever seen."

Marilyn plays a dumb, tawdry blonde in "Bus Stop"—the same type of easy part she fled from 18 months ago. But Logan and Paula Strasberg, Marilyn's drama coach imported from the Actors' Studio, insist the role from the hit play is "rich and detailed."

Magazine photographer Milton Greene, her partner in her producing company, added "I've seen the rushes and she comes across as a great actress."
Actress Emerges

At last Marilyn was hustled from her dressing room for her scene. Mrs. Strasberg stood behind the set to make notes. Photographer Greene whipped out his camera. Logan barked instructions.

Marilyn looked thinner. She wore little make-up. The flamboyant hair-do and huge mouth were gone. She looked almost like a little girl. She wore a tight black satin skirt and the highest heels in history and played the entire scene upside down-slung over the shoulder of her leading man, Don Murray.

Marilyn's speech consisted of exactly two words in a Texas accent—"Ah do."

Then the star was hustled back to her dressing room.
"Nobody can see Marilyn," sighed one studio worker. "Sometimes not even Logan. Why, Buddy Adler (the studio head) flew to the Idaho location and only got to talk to her for a minute through her dressing room window."

Estranged Hubby Won't Have To Support Cats

Chicago—(U.P.) — Judge Henry G. Hershenson ruled Tuesday that a husband may have to pay support to his estranged wife but not to her cats.

James Lauritsen, 39, has been ordered to pay his wife $45 a week support, $10 of which was for the care of her five cats.
Judge Hershenson said the cats could look out for themselves and cut the payments to $35.
