The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

A Slipped Disk in the Neck

Some persons ask me if they should rush into an operation for a supposed slipped disc in the neck. Naturally, without having the patient thoroughly examined by a good x-ray man and a good neurologist, I cannot venture an opinion. All I know is that in my own practice I have never seen a patient who, I thought, had a slipped disc in his neck. There probably should be such a disease, and cases have been reported, but because I do not see them, my impression is that they must be rare.

Walter Alvarez

Usually, I think the symptoms complained of are due purely to a destructive arthritis of several of the vertabras in the neck. I know, from personal experience, that with such a severe arthritis, from time to time distressing pain or burning can appear, usually just above a shoulder. But usually after a while this pain goes away even without any treatment.

I, personally, would not have an operation for a "slipped disc" in my neck unless I had very definite symptoms indicating the pressure of a disc on my spinal cord, or some of the nerves leaving it. I would want to have a very positive opinion from a neurologist in whose wisdom and conseratism I had great trust.

Impartial Advisers in Court

I just finished reading a remarkable book, called "Four Square," by Dr. John Rathbone Oliver, an able psychiatrist, who for many years following 1917, was medical officer and adviser to the Supreme Bench in Baltimore City. In 1917, one of the police magistrates, an able man, would often drop in at the great Phipps clinic to get help from the psychiatrists on the problem of dealing with a criminal who had just come before him. Often the judge would have a hunch that the man was not sane, but not having had a psychiatric traing, he could not be sure.

From the conversations Dr. Oliver had with this judge, he decided to spend more than half of his day helping the police courts with their many medical problems. Eventually, the judges so appreciated this impartial help that whenever there was any question of the mental condition of an accused person, the man was quickly referred to the advisory group. Either the defense or the prosecution could refer the man, and soon both the defense and the prosecution attorneys learned to abide by the decision given them by their friends, the psychiatrists.

Is it not remarkable that when an experiment like this worked so well it was not quickly adopted by all the courts of this land?

Particularly Brutal

All my life, as I have read the accounts of court trials, I have marveled that when a man accused of murder was obviously psychotic, he was likely to be quickly condemned and soon executed. The reason for this was that, being of unsound mind, the man was particularly brutal with his victim and completely callous and without regret afterward. It was this callousness that got him hanged so quickly. Actually, if the people in the community and the judge and jury had had the slightest knowledge of psychiatry they would have seen that the man had acted insanely.

All this does not mean that I want to coddle or set free the criminally insane. Our mental hospitals are not designed well enough to hold the criminally insane. These men easily escape from antiquated buildings, and hence they should be kept in prisons. But it is sad that our courts are often highly inconsistent in their handling of the really insane, and of those murderers who want to escape by pleading insanity.

Bridge Constructed In Parking Lot

Chicago — (U.P.) — A unique bridge is being built on the Northwestern university campus in suburban Evanston.

It doesn't bridge anything. It won't carry any traffic. And it's being constructed—of all places—in a parking lot.

But it will get as much of a workout, before it is dismantled in five years or so, as it would if it were part of a heavily traveled highway.

The bridge is part of a $250,000 research project to be constructed by Northwestern Technological institute on truss members and connections. The purpose of the project is to improve bridge design.

The bridge will have a span of 100 feet. It will be 20 feet wide and 16 feet high. It will be supported on concrete caissons.

Loading tests will be made by means of hydraulic jacks anchored to the caissons. The jacks will supply sufficient pressure to simulate most loads.

To simulate greater shocks engineers will swing a great steel ball at the bridge with the help of a crane.

The Army, the Bureau of Public Roads, the Association of American Railroads and several private corporations are lending financial support to the research.

The first Catholic newspaper in theUnited States was founded by R. V. Gabriel Richard at Detroit in 1809.

Coos Bay — (U.P.) — Howard B. Garrison has announced his resignation as vice president of Evans Products Co. here and as general manager of its western division.

Japanese Weapons For Syria Approved

Jerusalem—Israeli Sector—(U.P.)—The United States has approved sale of Japanese weapons to Syria, one of the key Arab nations in the inflamed Middle East, Tokyo dispatches said.

The report came as U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold conferred with Israeli prime minister David Ben-Gurion for the second day on how to stop Egyptian-Israeli clashes from blowing up into war.
