

Hitchcock Speaks To Labor; McKay Says Morse Indifferent

By UNITED PRESS
 Phil Hitchcock carried his campaign for the Republican nomination for U.S. senator to organized labor yesterday while his opponent, Douglas McKay, continued to criticize Sen. Wayne Morse, the Democrat both would like to defeat in November.

Hitchcock told about 50 members of the Teamsters union in Portland that "you rank and file union members need a man in the United States Senate who is not afraid to speak out against union racketeers for fear that political contributions will be taken away from him." He said he did not believe that all union men were Democrats. Many of them, he said, vote Republican "primarily to demonstrate to those who are trying to force you to vote otherwise that you are free Americans."

Morse Charged
 McKay, speaking at Milwaukee last night, charged Morse with "utter indifference to the nation's welfare and security in his reckless pursuit of headline prominence."

McKay said that he had become acquainted with legislators and heads of government agencies during his tenure as interior secretary and that the relationship "would put me in an excellent position to be effective from Oregon, if you send me back as your senator."

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger again attacked Oregon's voting law which requires two signatures at the polls. The Oregon Democrat said it would "discourage people from voting." He took issue with Gov. Elmo Smith that the law was like that of 22 other states. He said he had received a letter from Dr. Richard S. Childs, chairman of the National Municipal League in which he said "What the purpose is of the Oregon system of having voters sign twice at the polls I cannot imagine, and we have . . . encountered no other state which includes that feature . . ."

Gov. Elmo Smith, speaking to the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Portland, pointed out the danger of relying on income taxes too heavily. A proper tax program, he said, must be equitable for our citizens to pay and we must not tax beyond our ability to finance state government in case of a business recession.

Christian Science Lecturer Talks Here

Peace of mind and peace in the world depend on the honest efforts of men and women to understand and apply spiritual laws of God, Ralph Castle, Belvedere, Calif., said last night.

Castle spoke under the auspices of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Medford. He presently is on an extended tour as a member of the Christian Science board of lecturership. He spoke on "Christian Science: The Law Governing True Self-Expression."

By relying on divine laws, he said, people find that they overcome fear, boredom, and tension and discover that lasting peace is a "gift direct from God, divine love, to each individual." "The divine fact regarding man's real nature is that he is wholly spiritual, the expression of God," he said.

Peace is everybody's business, he said, pointing out that "if we are to contribute to the peace of the world, the nation, the church, the community, or the family the place to start is with ourselves, in our own consciousness."

Castle declared that the problem of how to prevent war and the rumors of war can not be solved through governmental action and cooperation alone, but that the solution lives "mainly with each individual." Man's greatest need at this time, he said, is to know more about the true relationship between God and man.

SAC Boss Calls for Increase in Number of Intercontinental Jets

Washington — (U.P.) — Gen. Curtis E. Lemay wants "substantially more" B-52 intercontinental jet bombers for his Strategic Air Command than proposed by the administration, defense sources said today.

The blunt-spoken, cigar-chomping Lemay, who has been pressing the Pentagon for more long-range jet bombers, took his case before Congress today.

A Senate Armed Services subcommittee on air power called Lemay for secret questioning about whether the Strategic Air Command (SAC) is in danger of losing its air supremacy to Russia.

With Lemay, the subcommittee had reached the heart of its inquiry. Democrats who prompted the investigation made no secret of the fact that their number one target is to increase B-52 production.

Defense sources said that Lemay in the past year has submitted several proposals to the Pentagon — all calling for far more B-52 bombers than planned by the administration.

While Lemay has not requested any specific number of B-52s, defense sources said he has outlined requirements for two to three times as many more jet bombers than provided for in the administration program.

The administration plan calls for a fleet of about 500 B-52s to be completed by 1959. Lemay was said to be gunning for 500 to 1000 more of the giant, $8,000,000 bombers.

There were three main factors behind Lemay's demand for more intercontinental jet bombers:

1. Russia is currently producing more long-range jet bombers, and there is no hope of the United States catching up unless goals are expanded and production accelerated.

2. The present fleet of 1500 B-47 medium jet bombers is dependent upon overseas bases which are unreliable militarily and politically.

3. More than any other bomber, the high-flying B-52 has a capability to penetrate deep into Russia and hit its target.

The administration moved recently to boost B-52 production. But Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), a subcommittee member, said that even with this increase "the United States will still lag seriously behind the Soviet Union in the intercontinental jet bomber field."
