

Construction of New Bulk Plant Expected To Be Finished Soon

A new Standard Oil company of California bulk distributing plant under construction about 2 1/2 miles south of Medford is expected to be completed and in operation by June 1, 1956. District Sales Manager H. R. Edwards, has announced.

The plant is located on an 11-acre tract adjacent to the Southern Pacific mainline near Voorhies crossing.

The site of the original plant on McAndrews rd. is being abandoned because it is inadequate for present requirements and affords no space for future expansion, Edwards stated. The area's growth and anticipated future development favorably influenced the decision to build new and enlarged facilities in Medford, he said.

The new plant will consist of a warehouse building, garage, office, storage tanks, loading rack and railroad spur track.

The warehouse will be a 50 by 120 foot prefabricated steel structure with a 12-foot cantilevered canopy over a full width platform. The warehouse foundation and floor will be reinforced concrete.

The garage will be a six-stall, open front, truck-port type of structure with a concrete foundation and floor.

The office will be a 24 by 47 foot modern wood frame and

Leopard Skins Line Bath Room Walls; Flip of Button Brings Spray of Cologne

New York—(U.P.)—Cleanliness has come a long way from the days when the Saturday scrub in the wash tub was the family custom.

Now they're lining bath walls with leopard skins, gold plating the faucets and putting in showers that spray cologne.

"Any day now, we expect a request for a mink-lined tub," said Sherie Wagner, who with his wife runs one of the more lavish shops on Manhattan's lavish 57th st.

The Wagners specialize in fancy trappings for bath, dressing rooms and closets. They've equipped same for everybody from Texas oil millionaires to Greek shipping magnates.

Attractive Mrs. Wagner, a native of Pittsburgh, is the interior decorator of the family. Her husband, who studied architecture at New York university, works out the technical side of her ideas.

Take that shower which sprays cologne. Mrs. Wagner said it is their newest gimmick. Flick a button after a regular shower and a mist of a woman's favorite fragrance sprays forth.

The gold-plated faucets, one of the most popular items in the shop, cost $119.

"They used to run as high as $500 and $600 before we developed a special plating method to cut cost," said Mrs. Wagner.

The Wagners said they are equipping the staterooms on the yacht of Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, chairman of the Board of RCA. Another client is a wealthy woman in Bogota, Colombia, who asked the Wagners to plan baths, dressing rooms and closets for a house she has in mind. She said the architect could work out the rest of the plans around the Wagners' blueprints.

Other customers have included General Batista of Cuba, Jennifer Jones, the Ford families of Detroit, the Aga Khan and the Maharane of Baroda.

The present demand in baths, the Wagners said, is for gold and white color schemes; leopard or alligator covering for walls or such accessories as waste baskets; wash basins with hand-painted design fired on in gold; and such Wagner exclusives as a "merman" and "mermaid" design in place of the usual "his" and "hers" on towels.

Garden included

Mrs. Wagner said one of the most elaborate decorating jobs the shop ever took on was for a wealthy Long Island woman. Her dressing room and bath bordered on a private garden, with only a sheet of thermopane glass between the bath and the great outdoors so she could enjoy the view.

The sunken bath (it was more like a swimming pool, Mrs. Wagner said) was of free form shape, and on the garden side became a lilly pond.

The Wagners charged $16,000 for the job, but included imported mosaic tile floors and antique opaline cosmetic jars.

We asked Mrs. Wagner about the baths in her own Manhattan apartment.

"Not a monogrammed towel in the place," she said. "My husband and I are with this opulence all day long. I don't think we could stand it at home too."
