Some Present-Day Psychiatric Ideas

A while ago, happening to step on an uneven place on the sidewalk, I almost turned my ankle. The friend with me said, "Bosh; I am a well-adjusted, happy, easy-going man, who never in his life thought of using a little accident to get out of anything."

Walter Alvarez

Next day, as I chatted with another well-educated friend, I found myself unable, for a few minutes, to remember the name of an old acquaintance. "Why," asked my friend "are you hostile to that man? Why do you distrust him?" And I said, very truly, "No, don't be silly; I don't hate, resentments, envy, jealousies or hostilities. That man is a friend; I have nothing against him. Every man of my age occasionally has to wait a few minutes before he can recall a name."

A few days later I heard two friends remarking about the delinquent son of another friend: A lad who had been arrested for passing bad checks. The friends agreed that the parents of the lad must have been responsible for his criminal tendencies. In his childhood they had created a special localized bad environment that did not touch the other three children who turned out very well.

Thinking Dominated

With these three happenings in one week, I got to musing on the way in which, of late, a certain brand of psychiatry, now widely publicized in books, magazine articles and plays, has come to dominate the thinking of most of us.

What is sad is that so many of us have come to accept these ideas as Gospel truth, and yet most of them are only unproved theories. Many of them are not accepted by the more conservative and old-fashioned type of psychiatrist. Certainly, my thousands of nervous patients who have talked to me very frankly of their psychic troubles, have never told me of such thoughts, unless they had become thoroughly indoctrinated during several years of psychoanalysis.

I was thinking of these ideas when, at a convention, I sat down to supper with a few old psychiatric friends. They were of the new type who are experimenting on the brains of animals or studying the electroencephalograms of men and women, and with the help of chemists, physiologists and pharmacologists, are learning many helpful things about the ways in which the human brain works in health and disease.

When I told these men how disturbed I am at the way in which millions of persons are swallowing whole and without thought or study a number of dogmas which, so far as I can see, have never had any good basis in fact, they said, "Yes, it is too bad, and we regret it as much as you do. But don't worry: A lot of the 'lunatic fringe' type of psychiatry is already ready on its way out. Sensible people are beginning to laugh at it, and whenever people begin to laugh at anything, it is doomed."

I certainly hope so. Why am I so distressed? Because today I see so many persons mentally troubled. They were told perhaps that a child's psychosis was all their fault, when there were many good reasons for believing that it was not. I myself would be angry if, without asking me anything, a social worker were to tell me that years ago I threw my child into a psychosis by grieving too much over the death of another child; or if she were to tell me that I must have been too strongly attracted sexually to my mother, or that I nearly broke my leg because I wanted to. How does the woman know all this so positively? She does not know it. She is just giving out a line of patter that she has absorbed without any celebration on her part or any demand for proof.

Plays Full of Ideas

I am not accusing all psychiatrists of doing this sort of thing: Many a one will doubtless write me angrily to say that he would never do such a crazy thing as to accuse someone of a grievous fault until he had inquired and found out if it was true. What I am saying is that today our literature and our plays are full of these new ideas, and nearly everyone is swallowing them whole. I have studied them carefully and, as I have said, many have practically no basis in fact. Let us remember that, through the years, even some of Freud's leading students could not swallow all of his theories, and hence were excommunicated by him. Incidentally, in science no one is excommunicated: Such behavior belongs only in religions.

I here will tell just one story to show how silly we humans can be when we accuse a person before we ask and get the facts. One day, years ago in prohibition time, I saw a woman who had just come from seeing a prominent internist. She was a handsome, well-dressed, well-poised and interesting woman of 45. I asked her why she became dissatisfied with her eminent doctor. She said, "You know he is a great believer in the idea that a woman should have many children. When he found I have none, I could see him bristle. Disgustedly, he said, 'I know well your parasitic type; you sit around all afternoon pampering yourself or playing bridge. What you need is more clean air. Out of doors, and a bit of excitement to lift you out of your dull stupid routine!' The woman said with a wry smile: 'I did not bother to tell him that my husband has a group of truckers running whiskey across the border. Every night I go with him in the car with a light machine-gun on my lap, on the watch for hi-jackers!'"

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.
