Chewing Gum Offers Prevention Against Sickness from Motion

New York — (U.P.) — Chewing gum offers the newest preventive against motion sickness for plane, boat and auto travelers.

The anti-sickness comound — meclizine hydrochloride — is contained in the sugar coating of the mint-flavored chewing tablets. It is claimed that the "Bonamine" gum gives protection against queasy feelings for at least 24 hours.

One or two tablets do the trick. The gum also eliminates the need for taking water, usually required with pills.

Moles are usually harmless growths, but can become cancerous. They should be watched for any changes in size, shape, or color that might mean cancer, the American Cancer society warns.
