New York — (U.P.) — John Landy takes another whack at the four minute mile Saturday and whether he makes it or not it is a privilege and a pleasure to have him with us.

If that sounds like a Chamber of Commerce speech, so be it. Because we too often are inclined to take it for granted that we have a corner on sportsmanship as well as athletic talent.

This lean, 26-year-old school teacher from Down Under is a champion in both departments.

It's a cinch, as he takes a bead on his own world mile mark of 3:58 in the West Coast Relays at Fresno, Calif., Saturday, that sooner or later he or somebody else is going to break it. Modestly deprecating his own ability to run faster than 3:56, Landy admits as much.

"Someday they'll run as low as 3:50, and it might be within five years the way they're running now," he predicts.

Might Do It
Notice he didn't say the way "we" are running. But this is

Pinball Measure On Portland Ballot

Portland — (U.P.) — A spokesman for coin machine operators said today that the issue of pinball machines in the Rose City would be on the ballot in November, regardless of how a pinball measure fares in next Friday's election.

Alvin J. Brown, executive secretary of the Coin Machine Operators of Oregon, said the ballot measure written for the primary election was poorly prepared and presented the issue backwards. It would only result in throwing the pinball question back in the courts, he said.

Brown said the industry would sponsor an initiative petition before the November election to give voters a clear cut choice.

Of next Friday's ballot measure, Brown said: "If people are for pinballs they must vote 'no' and if they are against them they vote 'yes'."

Agrigento, Italy — (U.P.) — Vincenza Galgano had to postpone her wedding plans Thursday, when the city registrar found she was a sort of "woman who never was." A check showed Miss Galgano's parents had not registered her birth, had not baptized her, nor christened her. She had also never been to school and never voted.

Is That So?

Editor's note: Do you want to extend the life of practically every kind of plant material used for show purposes, home, office, banquet hall and church? Here is the second of series of questions and answers on this subject to be published in the Mail Tribune telling you how to make your dahlias, roses or lilies last extra days. The material is largely taken from Eugene Burns' notes on his recent Far Eastern trip.

Question: Is there any particular way of handling or packing cut flowers to make them last longer?

Answer: Handle each flower with the prized care it deserves. Pick them up by their stems and handle them as little and as quickly as possible. Delicate and fragile blossoms, like camellia, gardenia, and southern magnolia may be permanently damaged if you brush one against the other or carelessly place them in a basket or container. Get the habit of placing them on your table or work surfaces so the heads extend over the edge.

When arranging the flowers, lift them by the stems and place them directly from the conditioning container into the vase or bowl.

Q.—Should flowers be "conditioned" before placing them in a bouquet?
A.—Most flowers will last longer if properly conditioned—that is, placed in water in a cool, darkened room.

On the underside of leaves there are many minute pores, sometimes called breathing cells. These pores open and close to regulate the amount and rate of carbon dioxide absorption, the liberation of oxygen, and the loss of moisture. At night, when it is dark, these breathing cells almost close. This reduces the amount and rate of moisture-loss. In the daytime, if the room for conditioning is darkened, these pores which normally would be open, tend to close, thus decreasing the moisture evaporation through the breathing cells of the foliage.

When "conditioned" the plants have an opportunity to soak in water overnight—or at least for some hours, and thus they have stored up a supply of water and have hardened. They are then much better prepared to be handled in making a flower arrangement or to be transported.

Should Be Mist-Sprayed
Q. Besides this, should the flowers be watered from above?
A.—Usually the air in a room is inclined to be dry. Hence, to duplicate greenhouse conditions, it is well to mist-spray the flowers.

A fairly cheap bottle-spray with a plastic fixture so it won't rust is available at your service station where such sprayers are used to clean windshields.

With the sprayer, spray a fine mist of cold water into the air above and around the flowers and foliage after you have placed them with stems in water. A thin film of moisture will settle on petals and foliage and thus increase humidity in a room and prevent undue loss of moisture through flowers and leaves.

Q.—Should one use faucet water? Ice water?
A.—Room temperature water is usually best but let the faucet water stand from 5 to 10 minutes before use so that the air bubbles can escape before you place the stems in it. Air bubbles in the stems prevent the rise of water. Hence, fill your conditioning containers with water before you go out to gather flowers. By the time you have returned, the water will be ready.

Use of Water
Q.—Is deep water essential?
A.—Almost all water absorbed by cut flowers enters through the base of the stem. One exception is the carnation. So for most flowers shallow water is just as good as deep water as far as intake is concerned. But when the room is exceedingly dry, use generous amounts of water—it will lessen evaporation through the leaves and stem. For some flowers which have leafless stems, such as cyclamens, hyacinths, and calla lilies, it is best to use deep water.

But regardless, keep the water level high enough to keep stem ends always in water.

Next week there will be another article on how to prolong the life of cut flowers. Meanwhile you may wish to consult How To Make Cut Flowers Last by Victoria R. Kasperski (Barrows, N.Y. $2.95).

MEDFORD (OREGON) MAIL TRIBUNE—THIRTEEN

Mrs. Keller's Jury Picked in Bomb Case

Portland — (U.P.) — A jury of five men and seven women was sworn in yesterday to hear the trial of Joyce Keller, 28, accused in last year's Meier & Frank bombing here.

Mrs. Keller, who says she is innocent, was implicated by her blind brother-in-law, William Clarence Peddicord, who was sentenced to 20 years in prison for the bombing. Peddicord's attorney yesterday filed notice of appeal to the State Supreme Court of severity of the sentence. Mrs. Keller was charged with causing "injury to persons and property by explosives." Peddicord named her as his "eyes" in the department store bombing.
