Negro Vote Gains Sound Respect Of Democrats and Republicans

Atlanta — (U.P.) — The Negro vote has developed such formidable strength in recent years that neither political party will be able to treat it lightly in this presidential election year.

As a result, look for mounting pressure at Democratic and Republican conventions for stronger civil rights planks in answer to Negro demands that racial segregation be eliminated from the American scene. Southern delegates are ready for a fight to the finish.

One of the amazing aspects of the race issue is this transition of the Negro from slavery to a potential balance of political power in less than 100 years.

Best estimates place the present Negro vote between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000. It's increasing fast, despite severe registration restrictions in the south.

Right now most Negroes vote Democratic, although dissatisfaction with the civil rights platforms of candidates in the nomination race may swing more of their votes to the Republican side this presidential year.

After the 1952 election, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People surveyed the Negro vote in 50 cities of the North and South and found that about 75 per cent had voted for Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic candidate.

Large scale voting is a fairly recent privilege for Southern Negroes — won through decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court. Most Negroes take the gift seriously, often standing in line for as long as a day to register.

The event that opened the floodgate for the Negro vote turnout was a 1944 Supreme Court decision in a Texas case. The court ruled that the right to vote "is not to be nullified by a state through casting its electoral process in a form which permits a private organization to practice racial discrimination in the election."

Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi, in an effort to keep the Negro vote down, have thrown up strict voter registration tests.

As a counter measure, Negro groups get advance copies of the exams, dig up the answers and distribute them to Negroes through churches, civil clubs and labor unions. Schools for prospective voters are held in some states.

A standard requirement includes the ability to read and interpret the U.S. and State Constitutions. But some of the questions are a bit trickier.

"How many bubbles are there in a bar of soap?" was on a Mississippi test, according to a complaint filed in 1954 by the NAACP.

"How many people are there on the U.S. government payroll that run the government?" is a puzzler on the Alabama test.

Negro voting figures are difficult to get because most states do not separate their lists by race. The NAACP estimates about 6,000,000 were qualified for the 1952 presidential election, with 2,500,000 in the South and border states.

Not much chance yet for a Negro balance of power in Dixie. But, according to Henry Lee Moon, NAACP official, the burgeoning Negro vote could swing the scales in a close race in such crucial states as New York, New Jersey, Pennsyvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, California and Missouri.

Those nine states have 223 electoral votes, just 44 less than the number necessary to elect a president.

Tribune Receives Certificate of Merit

The Mail Tribune has been awarded a certificate of merit by the American Newspaper Publishers association in the ANPA's safe-driving campaign, it was announced today.

Cranston Williams, ANPA general manager, said the award was made because the newspaper's circulation fleet operated a distance of 233,758 miles during 1955 without a single accident.

"This is an outstanding record when it is considered that your paper is one of 56 newspapers that received certificates of merit out of a total of 459 participants," Williams said.

He added, "Prevention of accidents on the highways occupies an accepted place in the daily lives of everyone. The newspaper publishing business by its participation in the ANPA safety campaign has added another outstanding chapter to the history of highway safety."

F.L.G.—I resent her deception.

Mrs. F.L.G.—My parents forced me.

• • •

F.L.G.—When I first met my wife she was supposed to be a widow. Her parents took care of her child and she worked as an office secretary. After our marriage we made a home for the child and we now have one of our own, as well. I have recently learned that I was deceived about her child and her status. She was not a widow and had never been married.

I resent the deception and I find myself unable to love her or her child. I think under the circumstances she owes me a divorce, but she refuses to consider it.

• • •

Mrs. F.L.G.—I never wanted to deceive my husband, but I was beaten down by my parents. I had hurt them so much and they had done so much for me in shielding me and giving me a chance to rehabilitate myself that, for their sake, I dared not risk losing the man who was courting me. After all, they had a tremendous stake in my marrying, as that relieved them of the task of taking care of my child while I worked.

I do not want to give my husband a divorce because I am sure that would be as bad for him and both children as for me. We have lived together now for nearly five years and I know that we love each other. If I did not love him, I would accept his offer of generous alimony, but I know he is demanding a divorce only because he feels this is expected of him.

Until he learned by chance of the fact that I had never been married, he had been a very devoted husband who constantly praised me for being a good mother and a good companion. His life would be just as messed up as my own if I were to appease his hurt feelings by giving him a divorce. I wish there were some way of making him realize that the one stupid mistake I made as a young girl was not an offense against him.

• • •

The Council: Deception is not easily forgotten or forgiven. If the victim of a deception does not display resentment, he suffers a loss of self-respect. A person may go a very long way towards self-punishment in order to protest deception.

The husband in this case seems willing to throw away a good home, lose a loving wife and deprive his own child of a mother in order to demonstrate his sense of outrage at being deceived. He is also willing on that account to wreck the life of a woman he must still love, but for his sense of resentment.

He is, of course, punishing the wrong people. He and the children certainly do not deserve punishment. As for his wife, she is clearly not the same girl today as the one who was weak enough to have a child out of wedlock and contrite enough to be blindly obedient to her parents when they required an act of deception.

He should bethink himself that his wife is obviously not a sly deceiver, or she would never have got into her predicament. She obviously was lacking in strength when she got into trouble and lacking in clarity of thought when she agreed to a deception. He knows her shortcomings, but he also knows her qualities. He should rid himself of the destructive notion that he is honor-bound to demand a divorce.

He is honor-bound to try his hardest to understand.

McKay, Hitchcock Move Into Portland

Portland — (U.P.) — Douglas McKay and Philip Hitchcock, contenders for the Republican nomination as U. S. Senator, will both move their campaigns into Portland this week in a last drive to capture votes in Friday's primary election.

McKay is scheduled to spend most of the week in a personal drive aimed at the metropolitan voters with time out Tuesday to fly to Coos Bay for a date he missed out on earlier, when grounded with a bad cold.

Hitchcock, too, has Portland as his major area of operations in this final week of campaigning. The ex-senator plans four days here in the stretch drive for Republican votes.

Elmer Deetz, a third candidate in the race, will concentrate on the rural areas in the final week's action, while the fourth candidate, George Altvater has announced no plans for the week.
