

The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, a newspaper editor, a women's page editor and two newspaper writers. These consult with clergymen of all faiths and denominations. All letters are held in complete confidence.

L. R. M.—My son, Allen, is very bitter toward me because I dis-suaded him from marrying a girl because she suffered from a terrible disease. She has since died from this disease, and Allen feels he betrayed her in not marrying her.

Allen—I realize that Martha might have died even if we had married, but I sometimes think that it might have worked out differently. When I stopped seeing her under pressure from my father, she must have guessed the reason and it must have been a terrible blow to her.

My father did not limit himself to reason and persuasion. He held over my head the fact that he was providing for my future and that he would do nothing for me if I crossed his wishes. I knew that I could not support a wife, let alone a sick one, without help and I therefore had to obey his orders.

Assuming that Martha would now be dead if we had married, I fail to understand why we could not have enjoyed happiness for as long as it was possible. I feel as though a crime was committed and I cannot forgive my father the fact that he compelled me to agree to that crime.

The Council: Allen has not thought this situation out clearly. His bitterness has not been earned by his father, but is the product of his tortured conscience.

Why did Allen, if he loved Martha dearly, abandon her to the point where she had to "guess" the reason he was not seeing her any longer? It would have been much kinder if he had told her the truth about his father's position and had continued seeing her and giving her his companionship. Martha would not have been crushed by the truth, because she knew of her condition and probably did not want to marry. But she should have had the steadfast friendship of the man who professed to love her, and this Allen denied her because he was incapable of loving her without possessing her.

Allen's father had every right and duty to oppose such a marriage, and he should not now be blamed in bitterness for Allen's
