Libel Suit Brought By Wallace Dismissed

Washington — (U.P.) — Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts dismissed a $250,000 libel suit brought against commentator Drew Pearson by Lew Wallace, a leading Democratic politician in Oregon.

The judge agreed to permit an attorney for Wallace to file an amended complaint within 10 days. The attorney explained he wanted to introduce additional material and specify damage.

The suit was filed here in February. It charged that Pearson libeled the Oregon Democrat on Jan. 21 and 22 when he reported Wallace had written a letter to President Eisenhower urging him to exert pressure toward getting a mining patent for the McDonald family, owners of the Al Sarena claims.

Wallace denied writing such a letter. His attorney argued that the report that he did so amounted to a charge of "dishonesty."

Salem Budget Given Committee Approval

Salem—(U.P.)—A Salem budget of approximately $4,200,00 has been approved by the city's budget committee. The budget would raise some policemen's and firemen's salaries and levy the entire $35,000 park tax.

City councilmen and other citizens on the budget committee had been undecided whether to levy the entire $35,000 park tax or only $20,000 of it.

Public hearings on the budget will be held before the city council July 9.

Authority Transforms Cauca Valley Into Productive Section

Cali, Colombia — (U.P.) — For more than half a century, the inhabitants of this richest part of Colombia dreamed of a master plan that would transform Cauca Valley into the industrial and agricultural heart of South America.

Today that plan is a reality. Sparked by TVA's David E. Lilienthal, backed by the Colombian government and encouraged by the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development, the Cauca Valley Authority has been formed and is hard at work.

The basic problems are twofold. First, complete utilization of the region's hydroelectric potential; second, more productive use of what Lilienthal has called "the richest land in the world."

The Cauca Valley, 200 miles long and lying in a north-south direction parallel to the Pacific Ocean, is flanked by two ranges of the Andes. One of them holds an estimated 20 billion tons of precious coking coal. Mineral reserves of the other range have not yet been explored.

Dozens of swift flowing rivers charge towards the Pacific from the slopes f the western range.

Through the broad, green valley flows the Cauca River.

Diverse Crops

Already, by Colombian standards, the Cauca Valley is an industrial and agricultural paradise. Fifty tons of sugar cane per acre is a high average for most parts of the tropical world. But some plantations in the Cauca Valley produce over 200 tons per acre. For topsoil in the valley, washed from the Andean hills over past centuries, goes down—by actual drilling test—as far as 90 feet!

The varying altitudes of the area—3,000 feet at valey level to 10,000 feet in the mountains, enable it to produce such diverse crops as bananas and peaches, grapes and cocoa, coffee and pears.

Nearly a quarter of Colombia's total wealth originates in the Cauca Valley. It also holds 24 per cent of the nation's 14,000,000 people.

Cali, which tripled its population to 400,000 in the past 10 years, is now the fastest growing city in South America. A sizeable section of U. S. corporate business is represented here. Some 250 Americans manage these pharmaceutical, tire, textile, cardboard container, food products and other firms or conduct business of their own.

But under the CVC plan, present manufacturing will be dwarfed over the next 30 years. Thirty hydroelectric and steam generating plants will boost present power production to 660,000 kilowatts. Flood control will put an extra 200,000 acres of black bottom land into crop production. New road systems will give farmers quicker access to markets. CVC machinery pools and experiment stations will help them modernize farm practices and boost the valley's crop value 500 per cent.

More Power

Already the first hydro plant on the Pacific-flowing Calima River is under construction. This will supply 120,000 kilowatts to an electricity-hungry Cali by 1959.

Next year another dam will rise from the bed of the Cauca River south of Cali. By 1962, it will generate 60,000 kilowatts and curb the yearly floods.

Also forming in the Cauca Valley are 135,000 acres of demonstration areas. Here CVC's agricultural experts will seek to prive to the valley's landowners that scientific land use, involving drainage and irrigation, can pay dividends.

But farmers themselves will have to pay for any CVC improvements to their land.

The Colombian government has backed CVC's electric power and flood control program with $68,000,000. The departments of Caldas, Valle and Cauca, which straddle the Cauca Valley and stand to benefit, have put up an equal amount.

The International Bank, because of its favorable report on CVC, is expected to lend $27,000,000 for equipment and machinery.

Total costs are estimated at $187,000,000 and all loans and investments will be repaid by CVC.

Because CVC marks South America's first regional approach to economic development, it is being carefully watched by other Latin countries.
