Ike's Grip on Republican Party Tightens With Each Golf Swing

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Correspondent

Lyle C. Wilson more White House years, is dying hard. But it seems to be dying.

Washington — (U.P.) — Every time President Eisenhower slams a golf ball down the fairway or, even into the rough, his grip on the Republican Party tightens. The idea he couldn't stand the campaign gaff a gain, couldn't face up to four more White House years, is dying hard. But it seems to be dying.

Helping it die is the man whom the President laughingly refers to as "My fellow cardiac." He is Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson whose severe heart attack took place a couple of months before Mr. Eisenhower was stricken. Democratic strategists will make an issue of Mr. Eisenhower's health with the "part-time president" slogan this year, despite Johnson's similar experience.

Sound and Logical

That is a sound and logical Democratic campaign issue. But it is qualified considerably by Johnson's position in the Democratic high command. The majority leadership is a tough job. Johnson is meeting his responsibilities without evidence of distress. So, too, is Mr. Eisenhower. Against the Democratic argument that the President can't take it is the day by day record of conferences and decisions, despite an after-lunch nap, Johnson's active schedule may be as good an argument in behalf of Mr. Eisenhower's fitness as any the Republicans could devise.

However Democrats, high and low, may rate the President, Republicans acknowledge him today as the boss. That was not the situation five months ago during the uncertainty about his political plans. A stricken president, so ill that he must bow out before his time, inspires neither fear nor confidence. He is not in a position to impose discipline of which the Republican Party requires considerable because of its factional structure.

Makes Whip Crack
Best recent evidence that Mr. Eisenhower can make his whip crack mean something came this week when Fred A. Seaton, midwestern newspaper publisher, became the surprise choice to succeed Douglas McKay as secretary of interior. McKay resigned to oppose Democratic Sen. Wayne Morse's reelection in Oregon.

Sixteen Republican senators, mostly right wing or Taft men, had endorsed Undersecretary Clarence A. Davis to succeed McKay. Both Seaton and Davis are Nebraskans. Seaton never was a right winger. He was on the Harold E. Stassen strategy board during one phase of the latter's efforts to obtain the Republican presidential nomination. His next political love was Mr. Eisenhower.

Republican right wingers however, are accepting Seaton without a murmur. Davis gracefully agreed to remain as undersecretary to the man who got the coveted job.

THERE'S MR. PRESIDENT
Washington — (U.P.) — An elderly woman in Lafayette Park, just across from the White House, was thrilled and surprised Wednesday when President Eisenhower passed her on his way to church. "Why, there's Mr. President," she exclaimed.

President To Spend Week End at Farm

Washington — (U.P.) — The White House said today that President Eisenhower plans to spend the week end at his Gettysburg, Pa., farm.

It will be Mr. Eisenhower's third visit to his farm in a week. Tentative plans call for the President to fly to Gettysburg early Friday afternoon following his weekly meeting with his cabinet.

Mr. Eisenhower spent last week end at his farm and got in 27 holes of golf Saturday. He went back Tuesday afternoon and played 18 holes and returned to Washington Wednesday morning.

On Memorial Day, he prayed in a nearly empty church for the nation's war dead.
