

Tornadoes Said To Be Increasing

Chicago—U.P.—Tornadoes are on the increase and some of the worst tornado weeks are still ahead for 1956.

Weather forecasters said 1956 was expected to have a bad tornado record. They explained that since 1950 the mounting rate of twisters has been spectacular.

Since 1950, when the annual average was about 150, here is what's been happening: 300 tornadoes in 1951, a drop to 270 in 1952, a total of 532 in 1953, 690 in 1954 and an all-time high of 870 in 1955.

Weathermen were quick to explain that at least a portion of the recent increases could be due solely to better observation and reporting.

Although an extremely bad year so far, the worst is yet to come, according to windstorm insurance experts for the Kemper

Insurance group. Insurance records show May and June to be the most active tornado months.

Nature produces some terrifying storms, but tornadoes are the most vicious and can occur any time and any place in the country. Forty-five states reported twisters in 1954.

George R. Faulds, who has reviewed hundreds of tornado losses for American Manufacturers Mutual Insurance Company, said that how you fare in a twister depends on the severity of the storm, how quickly you find shelter and just plain luck.

"Safest place during a tornado is a storm cellar or cyclone cellar, but if you don't have one, head for your basement," Faulds advised. "Since the storms generally move from a southwesterly direction, crouch along the wall in the southwest corner."
