Editor, Toy Maker Talks About Women and Careers

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent
New York — (U.P.) — A career guarantees a woman certain things, like her own money and her friends' curiosity. The spending money varies according to success, but the questions sound remarkably alike in all income brackets.

"How come?" the curious ponder. "She trying to compensate for something?" One woman, at least, believes there is a simple answer to the apparent puzzle of a woman putting career ahead of family.

Men refuse to believe it, Madeline Faust admitted, because it is so simple, but she vows that other women understand. "A woman finds herself with a need to earn a living," began Miss Faust, a French-Canadian with snapping brown eyes and crisp, French-accented conversation. "She finds work that interests her. Then, if something is worth doing, it is worth doing well. So she works hard at it."

True Place With Family
She succeeds beyond her wildest dreams, as Miss Faust has in her own career. "But she knows," the female executive added softly, "that a woman is truly happy only when she has a husband she loves and her children. Her true place is with her family."

"She cannot just sit and wait for this to come to her, so she works. And maybe it never comes."

In six short years Miss Faust has changed from a job-hunting divorcee with a small son to a businesswoman whose career takes her regularly to half a dozen countries. Her first idea for a career grew out of her experience as a mother, and now 10-year-old Michel, she says, "is the reason I work so hard—so I will build something for him."

Miss Faust decided other new mothers would like to get a copy of a baby magazine while they still were in the hospital. In French-speaking Canada there was no publication devoted to baby-raising advice. So she started "Mon Bebe," after getting a board composed of six pediatricians to approve each issue and arranging with hospitals in French Canada to distribute her publication to new mothers.

"It comes out now twice a year and goes each time to 17,000 mothers," Miss Faust said proudly.

That success led to launching a magazine for parents, which she later sold, and finally to a third venture.

Creates Toys
"I wanted a business which someday would give my son a career," Miss Faust explained. "I knew it must be close to what I already knew, so I said to myself 'toys.' I would know if a child would react to a toy and why."

The United States just happens to have more toy-buying parents and doting relatives than any other nation, so the youthful executive logically came to New York City.

From one large brown envelope she extracted a colorful, foot-high felt doll that looked a little like one of Snow White's seven dwarfs. The doll was one of a new "Talisman" series she concocted for children, Miss Faust explained.

A colorful painting captioned "Cathedralites," appeared from another envelope. She got the idea while she was in church, Miss Faust said. The lantern-like covers cleverly reproduce a stained glass window effect when placed over Christmas tree light bulbs.

Could she give all this up for love? Without a second glance at her products this career woman answered calmly. "But of course."

Women Making Who's Who Faster

"Women are now making 'Who's Who in America' four times faster than the average for all 28 editions since its founding in the Nineteenth century, the editors find on checking the 'new names' selected for the latest edition, Volume 29 (1956-57), published recently.

"During the nineteenth century the number of women sufficiently subject to general reference interest to merit listing in 'Who's Who' was surprisingly small," the editors explain. "The arts—and especially the lighted arts—accounted for most of the comparatively few who qualified."

"But numerous new opportunities for women to become prominent enough to be inquired about generally have resulted from the tremendous development of the applied arts which has occurred in this century, and the accompanying increase in opportunities for women in business, government and the sciences.

"As a direct result we are featuring more women. A check of all names being include in the new 1956-57 edition for the first time reveals the new listings of women are practically four times—3.9 times, to be exact—the average for the preceding twenty-eight editions."

A tentative constitution and by-laws were presented and approved by the club.

An audit committee, consisting of three members, Mrs. Jolliffe, Mrs. McComb and Mrs. F. E. Poole, has reported that the club's books were in order.

The group with other clubs participated in a recent food sale, the proceeds given to the Rogue Valley Memorial hospital fund.

The June 7 meeting will include a program and guests are invited. Mrs. Tygart and Mrs. Burton are chairmen for refreshments.

The June 8 family social evening will be held at 6:30 p.m., at Butte Falls Fish hatchery. A potluck dinner will be served.

A fund-raising project for the club will be a concession booth at the Town Team home baseball games. Mrs. Tygart has volunteered as chairman of the booth and all club members will participate alternately.
