Harry Truman Seen as Biggest Hurdle Facing Adlai Stevenson

Washington — (U.P.)—One of the shrewdest politicians in the Senate appraised the Democratic political situation today and observed: "Adlai Stevenson's biggest hurdle now is Harry Truman."

The speaker was a Southern Democrat, who has not endorsed Stevenson, would prefer Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas for the presidential nomination but would be dismayed if it went to Sen. Estes Kefauver or Gov. Averell Harriman.

In one sentence, he gave a capsule summary of what many Democrats are thinking two months before their nominating convention convenes at Chicago Aug. 13.

Stevenson Out Front
By crushing Kefauver in the California primary last week,

Stevenson moved far out in front in the race for the presidential nomination. But he is still far from sure of victory.

Former President Truman, now touring Europe, claimed credit for throwing the 1952 nomination to the reluctant Stevenson, then governor of Illinois. Now publicly neutral, he is regarded as a Harriman supporter who may throw his weight behind the New York governor at convention time.

Few Democrats doubt that Mr. Truman, who is considered cool toward Stevenson, can swing a great deal of weight if he wishes. He is viewed by many Democrats as a possible drafter for the nomination in case of a convention deadlock.

Harriman Displaces Kefauver
Moving swiftly to muster California primary to muster convention support, Harriman has displaced Kefauver in the minds of most Democrats as Stevenson's chief rival.

Harriman starts with most of New York's 98 convention votes. Stevenson has more of the large blocs with most of Pennsylvania's 74 and Illinois' 64 and all of California's 68.

Stevenson also seems to be picking up most of the South, which once might have been lined up for Johnson, the favorite son candidate for Texas. However, Johnson has discouraged delegate hunting in his behalf in other states.

Coffee Roasters Hike Prices at Portland
Portland — (U.P.) — Coffee roasters, citing a shortage of high quality Central American coffee beans, today announced a three-cent per pound increase in wholesale coffee prices in Portland.

The announcement followed a report that a leading coffee brand firm had made a similar increase in listings in New York. Most retailers here, however, indicated they would maintain their present prices of $1.05 per pound, for the time being.

Chicago is said to have had the first auto taxicabs which were placed in public service during 1915.
