Russian Church Leaders Delayed By Bomb Threat

New York (U.P.)—A "crank" delayed departure of eight heavily guarded Russian church leaders four hours, until early today, with a telephone warning that a bomb was planted aboard their aircraft.

The churchmen and 29 other passengers left for Europe on board the KLM airliner at 1:51 a.m. (EDT) after government agents methodically searched all luggage and the plane with fluoroscopes and other bomb detection devices.

Anonymous Call The last of the passengers had just taken his seat shortly before the aircraft's scheduled 10 p.m. (EDT) departure Wednesday when an anonymous telephone call was received at the KLM airport ticket counter.

"There is a bomb on the plane," a male voice said. Then he hung up.

All passengers were immediately debarked from the aircraft. The Russians were solidly ringed by 40 grim policemen assigned as bodyguards.

Bitter Picketing The churchmen, who had been the objects of bitter anti-Russian picketing during their 11-day U.S. visit, looked grim but undisturbed.

Whitebearded Metropolitan Nicolai of the Russian Orthodox church said at a press interview at Idlewild airport that he and his colleagues were "not in the least worried" by the bomb scare.

The unusual security measures had been taken from the time the Russians arrived at the airport. Departure time of their aircraft had not even been announced.

Seven Area Students Attending Institute

Corvallis — Five students from Medford and one from Trail and Prospect are among 127 selected high school boys from Oregon and Washington attending the first annual "junior engineers and scientists" institute at Oregon State college.

They are Kenneth Arnold, James Boyd, Darrell Brereton, Edward Coyte and John C. Reeder, Medford; Stephen E. Hoag, Trail; and Richard Robinson, Prospect.

The two-week course is designed to give high school students a look into career possibilities in the fields of engineering and science.

Selection to attend was based on scholarship and interest in science and engineering subjects.

LICENSELESS DRIVER Elizabeth, N.J. — (U.P.)—Bernie Johnson explained in traffic court Wednesday he just "hadn't gotten around" to buying a driver's license in the past 20 years. Despite the oversight, everything went along fine for Johnson until May 26, when he was flagged down for making a wrong turn.

Male Youths Setting Emotional Patterns for Rough Time in Old Age, Navy Psychiatrist Declares

By DELOS SMITH United Press Science Editor

New York (U.P.)—Today's male adolescents are setting up emotional patterns within themselves which will give them rough old ages, according to the chief psychiatrist of the Navy who, because of his job, can be taken as an outstanding authority on male adolescents.

Furthermore, these patterns will give the nation a rough time when today's very young men have become old men, continued Dr. and Captain George N. Raines in a recent lecture to a scientific audience. He based his remarks on experiences with adolescents who make up the bulk of the Navy's forces.

Becoming Proven Fact

It is a widely accepted theory, which more and more is becoming a proven fact, that the emotional attitudes established in adolescence rule individuals the rest of their lives. For that reason, it alarmed Dr. Raines that there is distinctly less of a sense of duty among 18 to 20-year-olds.

The sense of duty is being replaced by the question, "What's in it for me?" He cited the Navy's experience with its "bad conduct discharge," which is a form of punishment based upon the idea that "each of us has a sense of duty, that no man wishes to admit that he cannot perform the duties required of him, and that a man's conscience punishes more effectively than all the prisons in the world."

Large Increase

The Navy's use of this punishment increased 300 per cent between 1940 and 1950 although during the same period its program for rehabilitation offenders has been greatly improved. Dr. Raines added that this type of discharge made up only a minute part of total naval discharges but "nonetheless, this table increase must be recognized as indicating a trend."

This increasing group of adolescents "handle their problems largely by aggressive passivity," he said, meaning that they do nothing in an aggressive way. He gave as examples people who sit before television sets and at baseball games, critically demanding that they be entertained, rather than finding means of entertaining themselves.

More Demands

When aggressively passive persons grow old, "many will sit back aggressively and demand that they be supported." He saw the addition of disability benefits to social security laws as something which "might easily bankrupt the country" should there be any sizable segment of aging aggressively passive persons in the population.

"Any inducement to increase the amount of support, or hasten its beginning, as disability benefits will do, will be seized upon immediately," he said. "Since the emotional processes involved are largely outside the awareness of the individual, this behavior, as most human behavior, will not be regulated by legislation."

Dr. Raines is head of the neuropsychiatric branch of the Navy's Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. He also is professor and head of the Department of Psychiatry, Georgetown University medical center, Washington.

Young Denver Mother Vows To Forget 'Nightmare' of Birth of Son by Rapist

Denver (U.P.)—A Methodist mother vowed today to forget the "living nightmare" of the birth of her son, fathered by a rapist.

Mrs. Joe Anson, 27, was raped by a young airman in her apartment last Sept. 16. Her baby which was born Tuesday was immediately given to adoption agencies.

Neither Saw Infant

Neither she nor her unemployed, sick husband saw the infant.

"This nine months has been a living nightmare for both myself and my husband," Mrs. Anson said. "I've felt the baby stirring in my body and then I'm reminded of that terrible night."

She said she never could have loved the rapist's child and only wants to forget. She said they may move from Denver to help bury the memory of the last nine months.

Welfare workers were bent on protecting the child from shame in later life. They said they would allow "no publicity whatsoever" hereafter.

Couples from the United States and Alaska have offered to adopt the orphaned child. But the Denver Welfare Council said the identity of the couple finally chosen will not be made public because "we have to consider the child."

Father in Prison

The baby's father, John D. Peters, 18, a phlegmatic, hulking youth who admitted attacks on Mrs. Anson and several other Denver women, probably will never see his son, either. He is serving a sentence of 40 to 80 years in the Colorado Penitentiary.

Colorado law does not permit abortion unless the mother's physical or mental health would be endangered by bearing the child.

Hiccups End; Man Eyes Normal Life

Los Angeles (U.P.)—A frail but happy Jack O'Leary is living a normal life today all because an eight-year siege of hiccups appears to be over.

"It's like a miracle," O'Leary said. "It's wonderful, no more hiccupping every second . . . the house is so quiet."

O'Leary, now 30, began hiccupping on June 13, 1948, after his appendix ruptured. Under the attacks his weight dropped from 138 pounds to 75 and he suffered several heart attacks. Two weeks ago his hiccups stopped as he was watching television.

Only twice since have the hiccups returned and Wednesday the shipping clerk explained, "I believe I have hiccupped for the last time."

O'Leary went to more than 200 doctors in an effort to halt the never ending attacks. His plight became known and he received some 65,000 letters offering advice on how to stop hiccups.

Elephant Falls on Crowd Hurting Seven

Hicksville, N. Y. — (U.P.)—A 1,700-pound baby elephant tripped and fell on a number of spectators during a circus performance Wednesday night, injuring seven persons.

None of the injured, including two children, was hurt seriously. But John Murphy, 34, his daughter, Kerrey, 9, and his son, Brian, 5, were taken to a hospital for treatment of bruises.

The elephants, shackled three abreast, were being maneuvered into the main tent during the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey circus performance when the accident happened.

Plane Passenger Opens Wrong Door; Plunges To Death

Shelby, N.C. — (U.P.)—A honeymooning passenger opened the wrong door of an airliner in flight Wednesday night and hurtled 6,500 feet to his death near the cemetery of a country churchyard.

The body of Oren Ase Pruitt, 38, of Charlotte, N.C., dug a hole nearly four feet deep in hard packed earth just a few steps from the cemetery at Zion Church six miles from Shelby. Pruitt's bride said she became thirsty and asked her husband to get her a drink of water. She said he found the restroom door locked and then tried the plane's side door, thinking it led to another restroom.

Luther Haynes, caretaker of the church, told authorities he heard a "whistling sound" overhead and then saw Pruitt's falling body 30 or 40 yards away. Haynes said there was "a sort of explosion when it hit."

"I was just walking home from the store and was fixing to go into the house when it happened," the caretaker said. "It looked like a man and I went to see. Then I called the sheriff."

Pruitt and his wife, whom he had married Tuesday, were flying to Asheville, N.C., to visit her parents when the tragic accident happened.

Pruitt was sucked from the Piedmont Airlines plane when the door opened. The fatality was Piedmont's first since the line was formed Feb. 20, 1948.

Mrs. Pruitt was placed under a doctor's care when the plane reached Asheville a few minutes after the tragedy. She was reported to be in a state of collapse today.

Flight Attendant Burt Barnes, in the cockpit of the plane when the accident happened, said he rushed out to find the door open after a blast of air swept into the plane.

Barnes said a passenger told him "A man just went out the door." He said nobody apparently actually saw Pruitt fall.
