

Successful Use of Salk Vaccine During Polio Outbreak Revealed

Chicago—(U.P.)—Capt. John R. Seal of the Navy Medical Corps said today that Salk vaccine was used during an outbreak of polio in Honolulu and did not provoke paralysis as some medical scientists had feared.

Seal disclosed details of the inoculation program in a paper presented at the 105th annual convention of the American Medical Association.

The polio outbreak occurred among Navy personnel and dependents in Hawaii between July, 1955, and March, 1956.

First Seal said some doctors had felt that mass inoculation during an outbreak of the disease might result in paralysis of some persons who otherwise might not be so affected. But he said experience during the Hawaiian outbreak disproved, tentatively at least, this belief.

The Navy inoculation program, he said, was the first time Salk vaccine was used during an outbreak. He said it had been known since 1950 that immunizing injections to ward off diphtheria and tetanus, for example, can provoke paralysis if administered during a polio outbreak. Penicillin injections can do the same, he said.

There has been considerable concern that poliomyelitis vaccine, used during an outbreak of the disease, might show a similar ability to provoke paralysis," Seal said.

"For this reason, the decision to carry out the vaccination program was made only after considerable consideration of the known benefit against the possible hazard."

Cigarettes and Liquor

Earlier, Dr. Edward P. Luongo medical director of the General Petroleum Corp. of Los Angeles, reported that a few cigarettes a day and a few highballs before dinner won't cause heart trouble. In fact, a touch of alcohol now and then can even cut down the anxieties which often lead to heart trouble, according to the Luongo report.

It was based on a study of 100 company employees suffering from coronary disease, as compared to 200 other persons who don't have heart trouble. The number of persons who used tobacco and alcohol was about 18 per cent in both groups.

"To date, there is no convincing evidence in the literature that smoking tobacco has any effect in accelerating sclerosis or producing coronary disease," Luongo said.

The same goes for drinking, he said, and added "There is evidence . . . that in moderation alcohol may diminish the work load of the heart by reducing the pressure in the small peripheral arteries.

Luongo cautioned that his statements on tobacco do not mean there are no bad effects from smoking on already diseased coronary arteries.

Election Slated for Livestock District

Registrations for the Flounce Rock-Laurelhurst Livestock district special election July 20 will close on June 20 at 5 p.m., according to Mrs. Bereth Hopkins, county clerk.

Anyone living within the proposed boundaries or anyone owning 20 acres or more within the proposed boundaries, who is a registered voter in the state, is eligible to vote at the special election at the Upper Rogue Grange hall, Mrs. Hopkins said.

Anyone owning 20 acres or more within the proposed district but who does not reside within its boundaries must secure a certificate of registration from the county clerk's office. This certifies that he is a registered voter and is eligible to vote in the special election. The certificate must be secured from the clerk in the county in which the elector is registered.

Registrations can be made at Nutt's Market, Shady Cove, from 5 to 7 p.m., at Boothby's Market, Prospect, during store hours, or at the election department at the courthouse.

Formal Opening of Candle Room Set At Hotel Friday

The formal opening of the Candle Room, Medford hotel's latest addition featuring charcoal broiled foods, is scheduled for Friday.

The new room will open at 6 p.m. and will close at 1 a.m. daily, Monday through Saturday. On Sundays it will be open from 2 p.m. until midnight.

Completion of the Candle Room marks the final phase of the ground floor modernization, according to Asa I. Arnsberg, owner, and Dan Marimo, newly appointed co-manager of the hotel.

Two more remodeling projects remain to be done before the overall program has been accomplished, Arnsberg said. One is complete renovation of the 20 rooms on the south side of the building. The rooms, Arnsberg said, will have air conditioning, television, combination tubs and showers with sliding glass doors in fully tiled bathrooms, and new furniture.

The second project is the addition of new women's and men's rest rooms on the lower level. They will be tiled and mirrored with a dressing table for the women and an entry waiting room.

Arnsberg said he is now building a new addition to the Umpqua hotel in Roseburg. It is a banquet room that will seat 500 people. This will be completed in August, he said, and if it proves successful there, plans will be drawn for a banquet room addition to the Medford hotel.

Dutch People Told Of Royal Rift Over Influence of Healer

Amsterdam—(U.P.)—Leading Dutch newspapers broke a self-imposed silence today and informed the Dutch people for the first time of the rumored rift between Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard because of a faith healer.

The rumors said the queen originally sought the services of Miss Greet Hofmans, a 61-year old spinster, in helping the eyesight of 9-year-old Princess Marijke, but that Miss Hofmans' influence now extended to matters of state.

Abdication Seen

The reports said Queen Juliana and Bernhard had split over the issue and that there was a possibility the queen might abdicate.

The Dutch newspapers dismissed the idea of a constitutional crisis caused by the faith healer and said speculation over the queen's abdication was "preposterous."

Miss Hofmans herself, in an interview with United Press Correspondent Arnold de Jong, said "all this talk about politics is pure nonsense." She denied any interest in politics and denied reports she had influenced the queen in state matters.

But most Dutch citizens went to the polls in Wednesday's par-

'Disillusioned' Man Faces Mental Test After Playing 'Tarzan' on Church Tower

Cambridge, Mass.—(U.P.)—A "disillusioned" elevator operator underwent mental tests today after horrifying onlookers for 90 minutes Wednesday night by playing "Tarzan" on a church cross 185 feet above the street amid an electrical storm.

Godfrey A. Sherman Jr., 26, of Cambridge, finally was talked down from St. Paul's Catholic church in Harvard Square by his brother, Henry J. Sherman, 37.

The younger Sherman, an amateur actor, at times swung by one hand from the arm of the 15-foot cross. At other times, he munched on a sandwich and an orange and drank from a pint of gin.

As he did, a thunderstorm rumbled and lightning bolts split leaden sky behind the lone figure.

Tosses Bottle to Crowd

Before being induced to leave his lofty perch, Sherman heaved the gin bottle to a crowd of some 2500 below. Before that he tossed a handful of coins to the street.

Bells in the church tower just below the cross pealed eight o'clock the moment Sherman gave in to his brother's pleas and headed down.

"Nobody loves me, I'm disillusioned," Sherman mumbled to police and his brother as he was led away.

He was taken to Boston City Hospital and ordered committed to Westboro State hospital for observation.

Rescue Accomplished

Police said the older Sherman risked his own life by climbing to a staging on the bell tower to beg his brother to give up his acrobatic feats and come down.

The younger Sherman finally inched his way over slippery slate and copper on the tower roof and was grabbed by police waiting with the brother on the staging, which has been erected to repair the brick tower.

The old brother said Sherman frequently became despondent after drinking but never had tried to kill himself. He said he had been sent to Westboro once before but was released when doctors "found nothing wrong with him."

"He's a good kid but gets melancholy," the brother said.

Hawaii Fights Said 'Isolated Incidents'

Honolulu—(U.P.)—Military and civilian authorities poo-pooed today any suggestion that two recent clashes between Negro and White American servicemen were more than "isolated incidents."

Within a week's time a free-swinging brawl between Negro and White crewmen of the carrier U.S.S. Lexington and a street fight between Negro Marines and White Sailors had grabbed front page attention.

One White seaman was killed and several others hospitalized with injuries ranging from stab wounds to head cuts from flying beer cans in the two outbursts of racial animosity.

When refined all sugars are colorless and odorless and cannot be distinguished by ordinary chemical tests.
