

Crown Zellerbach May Build Paper Mill In Pacific Northwest

Portland—U.P.—E. P. Stamm, a vice-president of Crown Zellerbach corporation, confirmed Friday that the company was looking for a possible site for a new paper mill in the Pacific Northwest and that Astoria is among sites being considered.

The mill would cost up to 30 million dollars and would be a 400-ton-day operation, making board from pulped Douglas fir.

Stamm is in charge of the investigations being conducted by the Portland offices. The plan in mind for the Astoria area would involve integration of the company's large tree farming tracts with 140,000 acres of state-owned timberlands in Clatsop county.

About 120 million feet of logs for chipping would be required by the mill each year. The plant would employ some 300 workers in the mill and about 400 in the woods.

court that a "co-operative sustained yield agreement" be worked out with the help of the Oregon state board of forestry.

Since the big Pacific coast paper manufacturing company would need to have assurance of the timber from the Clatsop reserves before making the multi-million-dollar investment, the details may possibly require a change in legislation governing the sale of state-owned timber by competitive bidding.

The Clatsop plan is at a very preliminary stage, Stamm said, and the company is awaiting a letter of interest and intent from the Clatsop court before proceeding. The next step for Crown Zellerbach would be to make a formal petition with the state board of forestry.

Adenauer Receives Honorary Degree

Milwaukee, Wis.—U.P.—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer flew back to Germany Saturday with an honorary Marquette university degree and the colorful headfeathers that go with being an honorary American Indian.

The 80-year-old chancellor received an honorary doctor of laws degree at Marquette's convocation Friday night, climaxing a day in which he was made an honorary Indian here and given a full-blown celebration and parade in Chicago.

He boarded a Lufthansa German Airline plane to return to Bonn, Germany, at 9 p.m.

More than 3000 residents of this city of German tradition applauded the chancellor at the convocation ceremony.

"I have spoken with liberty and justice and of the danger of losing those values," he said. "But I am sure that the students and teachers of this university are united in the fight against

Officers, Agencies Of United Medford Crusade Meet Here

Officers and executives of local volunteer agencies met with officers of the United Medford Crusade at the YMCA Wednesday.

This was the first meeting in history with both groups together.

Sam Hersch, campaign chairman for the 1956-57 campaign was introduced, and Edward Branchfield, UMC second vice-president headed the discussion.

The group elected to establish a year-round public relations committee to cooperate with each agency in the crusade in acquainting the public with the day to day activities of UMC.

The committee will also interpret for the public various fund raising campaigns of agencies such as Girl Scout cookie sales, YMCA boy's camp soap sales, and how they work into the overall campaign fund.

Public Endorsement
In the past, the UMC board has given individual approval for each of the projects and in the future such approval will be accompanied by a public endorsement through the publicity committee.

Agency budgets for the coming year must be presented for review by June 15.

The crusade budget committee will appoint a member to visit each agency and investigate the budget books and other materials dealing with financial support.

Three Trucking Firms Fined for Violations

Olympia — U.P.—The Washington Public Service commission has penalized three trucking firms $100 each for violating state regulations.

R. G. Edwards, Prosser, was penalized for failing to issue bills of lading and operating without permit authority.

Others were Oregon-Washington Transport, Portland, operating without a lease or valid identification plates, and H. RomArleau, Wenatchee, addressing improper rates and charges and operating without permit authority.

Communism which would try to take those values away."

He asked Marquette to accept two scholarships which will entitle two Marquette students to attend German universities and colleges of their choice for advance study.

Annual Catfish Derby Here Believed First National One Formed

According to letter received by Curt Butterfield, president of the 20-30 club, the National Catfish Derby sponsored by the 20-30 club is not the only one in existence.

In 1952 the Parris Manufacturing company in Savannah, Tenn., and a southern sportsman suggested a catfish derby as a means of putting Savannah on the map. A National Catfish Derby has been held in Savannah ever since. It is a civic enterprise sponsored jointly by various civic clubs and the people of the Savannah-Pickwick area.

Festivities for the Savannah National Catfish Derby begin about the middle of June and last through July. The Derby is divided into a series of weekly contests with prizes awarded each week to the fisherman catching the largest catfish. At the end of the Derby month, a grand prize, usually a boat, is presented to the person catching the largest fish of the Derby.

Separate Prizes
Separate prizes are given to lady anglers and to commercial fishermen. Other activities include beauty contests, river cruises and open house tours into interesting Savannah homes.

Like the Rogue valley National Catfish Derby, no entry fee is collected. The Derby is a promotional enterprise designed to promote the Savannah area and attract tourists.

The Rogue Valley National Catfish Derby began in 1936 because of an argument during a pool game between Frank Perl and the late Delroy Getchell over fishing abilities. Frank DeSouza and Kenneth Anthony also were connected with its origin. As a result, the first derby was held at Savage Dam. The Medford 20-30 club began sponsoring the Derby in 1941.

This year's Derby will be held today at Tou Velle state park on Table Rock rd.

Reds Invite West To Troop Movement

Berlin, Germany — U.P.— Soviet authorities have confirmed they will invite Western observers to watch the withdrawal of 33,500 Red Army troops from East Germany.

A Soviet embassy spokesman in East Berlin said the invitation will apply to representatives of the British, French and American governments as well as newspapermen and other Western organization representatives.

The Soviet embassy said final plans for the visit had not been completed and he declined to pin-point the Red Army installations that were being evacuated.

He said transportation would be arranged by the embassy and there would be no difficulty for Westerners to gain entry to the Russian zone.

Movement between East and West Berlin is relatively simple, but Westerners must have special permission to enter the Soviet zone of Germany which surrounds the city.

Western sources generally have estimated Soviet troop strength in the Soviet zone of Germany at about 350,000.

In addition, East Germany is arming the first divisions of its new "People's Army" which presumably will take over the barracks vacated by the home-bound Russians.

James E. Lattie Gets Journalism Award

Corvallis—James E. Lattie of Medford has received recognition for outstanding work in campus journalism at Oregon State college. He was named the senior who has contributed most to Oregon State publications and received a plaque presented in honor of the late Claude E. Ingalls, editor and publisher of the Corvallis Gazette Times.

Lattie also received a citation for his work in OSC journalism from Sigma Delta Chi, national journalism fraternity. Lattie was editor of the Barometer, the campus newspaper, this year and has been president of Sigma Delta Chi.

An agricultural economics graduate from OSC this June, Lattie is the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Lattie, route 3, Medford.
