Children Who Wet The Bed

Recently, Lt. Chester M. Pierce, Capt. Harry Lipkon, Joseph McClary, and Lt. Noble, of the U. S. Naval Training Center, in Great Lakes, reported that reports that wet the bed are not quite normal in other ways. For instance, among 60 bed-wetters, one in 4 had abnormal electroencephalograms or records of the tiny electric currents formed in the brain. These abnormal currents suggest defects in the nervous system. Only 1.7 per cent of 60 normal men with a normal urinary bladder had such changes. The normal men had only a few relatives who had wet the bed, while among the bed-wetters, many had relatives who had this trouble. Sleepwalking was noted among the bed-wetters; also, frequency and urgency of urination. Certainly, no parent should ever punish or chide his child for wetting the bed.

My own researches have shown that in most families in which a child wets the bed there is at least one person who has been a bit psychotic, or eccentric, or nervously abnormal in some way.

Mice with a Muscular Dystrophy

According to the workers in the Roscoe B. Jackson Memorial Laboratory at Bar Harbor, mice have been found which inherit a tendency to become crippled and humped. By breeding these mice, the experimenters have found just how the disease is inherited. The trouble with the mice is primarily in their muscles, and the disease looks so much like a muscular dystrophy that students of this disease in man are now interested in the possibility of learning something with the mice that can help human beings.

ting the simple and sensible and helpful type of psychiatry that has been used through the ages by all physicians.

I am reminded of one of my heroes — the late Dr. T. A. Ross, of England — who by much study of the mentally disturbed patients in his practice, lifted himself from a position as a general practitioner in a small town to that of the leading psychiatrist in London.

Wouldn't Go To School

I am reminded, also, of the simple and practical type of psychiatry practiced by my general practitioner father. One day, in Los Angeles, a Mexican woman brought in her boy of 14, who she said, was an incorrigible truant. His father had beaten him and the truant officer had struggled with the problem, but the boy just would not go to school.

My father simply asked the boy why he did not want to go to school, and the lad said, "Because, when they call the roll, the kids all laugh at me." "Why do they laugh?" "Because my name is Isabel!" "In a Latin country, when a child is born, he gets the name of the principal saint of that day; and this poor lad had been unfortunate enough to be born on St. Isabels day.

My father then asked the mother what she would have liked to call the boy, and she said, "Charles." So my father wrote a note to the teacher, saying that from then on, the boy would be known as I. Charles Fernandez. And that was the end of his truancy. Thereafter the boy loved school.

According to the Freudians, an analyst should have kept asking the boy for 3 years if he hated his father or loved his mother too sexually; but my father belonged to the old-fashioned school of psychiatry in which the practitioners do not mind asking about recent causes for a nervous trouble, and do not

Fracture of Cigarette Smoke
Tar Will Produce Cancer

Recently, Dr. Ernest L. Wynder, of the Cloan Kettering Institute, of New York City, and Dr. George Wright, of the University of Toronto, reported that a chemical separated from the tar in cigarette smoke has produced cancer on the backs of mice, painted with the substance every day for a while. It was effective in 44 per cent of the mice, and it produced cancers also on the ears of rabbits. This finding much strengthens the conviction of many physicians that heavy smoking can cause lung cancer.

General Practitioners Can Be Good Psychiatrists

At a recent meeting of the Institute in Psychiatry and Neurology, at the V. A. Hospital in Lyons, N. J., my good friend, Dr. Francis J. Braceland, one of the outstanding psychiatrists of the world, pointed out that the family physician can be of the greatest help in recognizing the early symptoms of mental illness, and he can do most to help the family of the disturbed person.

Postpone Selection Of Keynote Speaker

Washington — (U.P.) — Democratic leaders have postponed selection of a national convention keynote speaker because of doubts that President Eisenhower will be their 1956 opponent, a party official said Saturday.

They decided to wait in case Mr. Eisenhower should reconsider his Feb. 29 decision to seek reelection. Their doubts were raised in the face of unanimous expressions of confidence from Republican leaders that the earlier decision will stand despite the President's current illness.

To the GOP, the questions presented merely wishful thinking by Democrats who would prefer to run against another candidate instead of Mr. Eisenhower.

The arrangements committee for the Democratic national convention met in Chicago this week for the announced purpose of naming a keynote speaker.
