'Mars Expedition' Returns To South African Station

Washington — Astronomers studying the face of Mars during the next six months hope to solve many of the mysteries of the only planet in the heavens that shows signs of life. Dr. E. C. Slipher, world-renowned authority on Mars, will go to Bloemfontein, South Africa, on the second "Mars Expedition" in three years sponsored by the National Geographic Society and Lowell Observatory of Flagstaff, Ariz.

At least 20 other points around the world, observatories will carry on a coordinated photographic patrol in coming months. They will keep watch on Earth's neighboring planet as it swings across the sky in its closest approach since 1941. Red Planet Nears
On Sept. 10, Mars and Earth will reach "opposition," lining up with the sun. Only about 35,300,000 miles apart—little more than a third the distance of the sun from Earth—they will be virtually as close as they ever come. The nearest possible approach is 33,900,000 miles, but that will not occur until the year 278,254 A.D.

Dr. Slipher and a fellow astronomer from the University of Berne in Switzerland, Paul Wild will use the Lamont - Hussey Observatory's 27-inch refracting telescope at the capital of the Orange Free State, Bloemfontein. It is the most powerful instrument in the Southern Hemisphere for detailed observation of the planets.

Mars crosses the night sky in South Africa's winter almost directly over Bloemfontein, and the weather is almost uniformly good. In 1954, from the same location, the first National Geographic Society - Lowell Observatory Mars Expedition made 20,000 photographs of the red planet as it passed just under 40,000,000 miles away. The continuing scrutiny of the face of Mars, with modern equipment and new techniques, may reveal answers to many of its secrets: its changing atmosphere, often shrouded in a mysterious "blue envelope"; the blue-green markings that grow and shrink against brick-red desert regions of the planet's surface; its exact diameter. Does Life Exist?
Man has long been fascinated by the possibility of life on Mars. Surface markings seem to freshen and spread during the Martian spring and summer, turning brown again as fall and winter near. These markings, Dr. Slipher believes, are definite indication that some form of vegetation exists on the red planet. "If this were not so," he reported after the 1954 expedition, "the winds of Mars would long ago have scattered the dust and sands everywhere, rendering the whole surface the same uniform tint."

Precise measurement of the diameter of Mars, showing astrophysicists whether the nearby dead world has an iron core like Earth's, could alter theories of the birth of all planets.

By making telescopic photographs in three different colors—blue, red and yellow—Dr. Slipher will look for new clues to the strange bluish haze that shrouds Mars at all but rare times of "blue clearing," generally observed during oppositions.

FIRE HAZARD
Detroit — (U.P.) — Fire Capt. Russell J. Bartels made one mistake in his haste to answer a call. He forgot to close the door on the cab of the fire truck. Bartels was pitched out of the cab, suffering cuts and bruises, when the truck sped out of the station.

LESS THAN 20-20

London Police Seek Halt to Gang Wars

London — (U.P.) — Police set a 24-hour guard on the wife of Jack (Spot) Comer Saturday in a new move to halt the spread of Chicago style gang warfare.

Comer, self-styled "king of the underworld," was arrested Thursday on charges of razor-slashing a follower of Billy Hill, his rival for the leadership of London's race track mobs. Mrs. Comer told police Friday her life had been threatened. Police immediately took up watch outside her apartment. Detectives have been patrolling the area quietly since Comer and his wife were attacked by a gang in the street four weeks ago. The new outbreak of gang warfare has sparked protests from members of Parliament. London newspapers claim gangs led by Comer and Hill are responsible for the outbreak.

Principals to Guide Colleges Announced

New York — (U.P.) — The presidents of seven privately supported universities from Massachusetts to California made public Saturday a set of eight principles to guide their institutions in seeking and accepting financial support from business and industry.

The presidents agreed that their schools' names must not be used in advertising any equipment which may be given to them, that gifts which place a future burden on the university should be refused and that scholarship programs can better be administered by the university than by a corporate donor.

Concurring in the statement were presidents Lawrence Kimpton of the University of Chicago; Grayson Kirk of Columbia; Deane Malott of Cornell; Nathan M. Pusey of Harvard; Harold W. Dodds of Princeton; J. E. Wallace Sterling of Stanford, and A. Whitney Griswold of Yale.
