First Major Change Made In Bookbinding Process

Chicago — (U.P.) — The first major change in bookbinding processes in 50 years is claimed by a Chicago publishing house.
The process was developed (by the Follett Publishing Co.) for library-bound books for young people and is called "Picture-in-Buckram."
A jacket cover in four colors is printed directly onto the buckram, the publishers said. A plastic coating keeps the book waterproof and bright throughout its life which is claimed to be five times longer than that of books with regular covers.
