

Brad Curtis To Appear In Concert

Ashland—Favorite ballads and folk songs, as well as those new to festival audiences, will be included in the special concert to be given Sunday evening at 8:30 o'clock at the festival theater.

The concert is sponsored by the Tudor Guild, and features festival veteran Brad Curtis, accompanying himself on the guitar.

Dr. Margery Bailey, director of the Institute of Renaissance Studies, will give the introductory comments to this special concert of British and American folk music.

Sunday night's special concert will include British folk songs as well as folk songs and ballads that are strictly American. The program will include "Widdicombe Fair," "The Darby Ram" and "The Wrangle-Taggle Gypsies," all British folk songs; and "Stagolee," "The Midnight Special," and "900 Miles," all folk tunes of American origin.

Brad Curtis is remembered by festival audiences for his portrayals of Old Gumbo in "The Merchant of Venice," Justice Shallow in "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and York in "Henry VI, Part III."

This season as in the past, he will also perform as the wandering minstrel, singing Elizabethan folk songs before "curtain time" at the festival.

Tickets for this unique concert are now on sale at the festival box office, and will be on sale at the gate Sunday night before the concert.

Mrs. Holst, who has made many such books, had them all on display and talked on the material suitable, and suggested ways of grouping and cataloguing the subjects included in such a book. Following the lecture those present adjourned to the herb garden, where each chose from among the 140 herbs growing there, one or more herbs from which to brew her own cup of tea for the luncheon which was served on the lawn immediately following the morning's program.

Mrs. Otto Nagel, society president, conducted a business meeting, the "all blue arrangement" sent in by Mrs. Edgar Vanderlip, was presented in her absence by Mrs. John D. Holst. Women Discover Tool Chest; Blow Torch Browns Meringue

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY United Press Correspondent
New York—U.P.—A woman daintily spread meringue over a mound of ice cream recently, struck a match to something resembling a blow torch, and browned the dessert before her audience of astonished males.

The dessert was called baked Alaska. The demonstration was the latest example of what happens when a woman gets interested in her husband's do-it-yourself tool chest.

Women continue to confound the booming do-it-yourself industry with their ingenuity. They not only get credit for initiating a high percentage of the repair and rebuilding projects around the home, but now they have pointed the way to new uses for carpentry tools.

Ice Cream Melted
A suburban housewife came up with the idea of browning that baked Alaska with a propane gas torch. She had trouble getting the dessert browned quickly enough in her oven to prevent the ice cream from melting.

Then she spotted the torch in the tool chest. The directions suggested using it to remove old putty or paint, to lay asphalt tile or patch a gutter leak.

"I thought right away of the baked Alaska," she told the executives of the Otto Bernz company, who make the torch and invented the woman over for a demonstration after they heard her story. The searing blue flame from the lightweight torch browned the dessert without melting the ice cream.

Now, without trying to figure out the feminine reasoning that led to this discovery, the torch makers plan to add a cooking page to their demonstration booklet.

Drills Polish Furniture
Other manufacturers have discovered that women are willing to try any kind of a gadget if they think it has labor-saving possibilities for household tasks.

They've learned to use electric drills, made for drilling holes in walls or woodwork, to polish furniture. A special attachment and pad fitted onto the end turns the drill into a rotary buffer.

One manufacturer now puts out the home tool kit formerly designed for a man's workshop in a kitchen wall cabinet designed so women will have the tools within easy reach.

"This is not limited to the average income housewife alone," a do-it-yourself industry spokesman said. "We find women whose husbands earn $15,000 a year and up buying these tool chests. It is not just economy that causes their interests. The real reason is that they can't get anyone to come and do these carpentry jobs around the house."

Guest Appearance Set
But Olga launches her comeback by doing a guest appearance on TV's "The Rosemary Clooney Show," aired tonight in many cities.

"I've been busy at home watching the children, and watching Ed's career," said Olga, rounder but otherwise unchanged from her years of being a housewife.

Curiously, she appeared shy and nervous about being interviewed again after all those years of privacy.

"Eddie has his own production company now and he's been very active since he won the Academy Award," she went on, steering the conversation to her husband.

"And me? Oh, I took the kids to school for a while, until I made them so late I had to put them on the school bus. Then my husband is a great lover of people and he likes having friends around for barbecues on Sunday."

Friendship Mentioned
"Maybe I'm lazy. I just never did anything about working. Then Rosemary Clooney asked me to do this show—she's a friend of mine. She married a Puerto Rican and so did Eddie!" she laughed.

TV has revived the careers of many another entertainer who quit for various reasons but was lured back by the big video money. And TV can use Olga. Many an armchair critic complains the same guests keep showing up on shows around the dial. And although Olga is a quiet, sweet girl in person, she changes to an exciting entertainer when she gets in front of that television camera.

"I've been taking voice lessons all these years," she said. "I'd like to do some dramatic shows, too, but I won't tour in clubs again."

On Vacation
Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dubuque of 207 North Holly street will leave today for a vacation in Yakima, Wash., and Portland. In Yakima the couple will visit Mr. Dubuque's sister, Mrs. Jack Stratton and later they will visit relatives in Portland. They plan to return home by the coast route.

This is to include pieces of soft wood and a pair of long-nosed pliers to help in making copper jewelry, and a pair of scissors. Also needed will be old magazines for scrapbooks, glue or paste and small articles for "secret pal" exchange.

No other seasoning is needed. Pour into molds or a loaf pan and chill until set. Serve on bed of lettuce leaves.
