Research Project In Forest Soils Problems Slated

Corvallis — One of the first research projects on forest soils problems and potentials in the ponderosa pine country of central Oregon will be started this summer by Oregon State college in northern Klamath and Lake counties.

The two-year project involves a basic soil survey and vegetation survey of some 60,000 acres of the pumice soils of the region. Information gained will serve as a guide for developing improved forest and range management programs, since the land is used for both forestry and grazing purposes.

New Information It will provide new information on relationship of soil properties and vegetation, tree growth and yield, reseeded and mortality, and land classification and use.

Cooperating with OSC on the project are the soil conservation service and Weyerhaeuser Timber company which has extensive holdings in that region.

C. T. Youngberg, forest soils scientist for the OSC forest experiment station, will be project director. Working with him will be Ted Dyrness, graduate research assistant in soils.

Advisors will be E. G. Knox, soils scientist, W. W. Chilcote, ecologist, and C. E. Poulton, range management research worker.

Woman Held After Tossing Lye Water

Portland—(U.P.)—Mrs. Lucille Tigner, mother of quadruplets and five other children, yesterday was charged with aggravated assault at police headquarters here, accused of throwing boiling lye water into the eyes of a man friend, Mrs. Tigner appeared at the police station voluntarily and declared she had acted in self defense.

Willie Jefferson, 49, was in a Portland hospital where physicians said he had definitely lost the sight of one eye from the effects of lye water but that it may be possible to save the other eye.

Mrs. Tigner was booked into jail under $1500 bail. She told officers Jefferson had struck her and threatened to kill her.

The woman's 10-year-old quadruplets are being raised in Catholic institutions.
