KIDNEY STONES

Many persons ask what to do about kidney stones. My answer is to see a urologist and take his advice. Sometimes a person will discover, accidentally, that he has a big, so-called stag-horn stone, which completely fills the inside of a kidney. Usually, in such cases, especially if there are no symptoms and no infection of the urine, nothing needs to be done. Removal of the kidney would not help the patient. Many persons who have a few small stones imbedded in the substance of the kidney also need no treatment. The persons who need treatment are those in whom the stones are keeping up an infection of the urine, or in whom some sand keeps going down the ureter or tube that carries the urine to the bladder. Every time a grain of sand goes down, the person suffers excruciating pain.

Thousands of people want to know if there is any drug that can be taken by mouth to dissolve kidney stones, and my answer is that I know of none. We physicians are not even sure that we know how to keep kidney stones from forming again and again. In some cases the trouble is in the parathyroid glands, little nodules that lie back of the thyroid gland in the neck. With certain diseases of these glands there can be too much lime in the blood, and some of this lime can form stones in the kidneys. Other persons, some of them gouty, can get kidney stones which are made out of salts of uric acid.

Some of the persons who have stones in the urinary bladder can have them crushed and reduced to small fragments that can then be washed out. An instrument is passed in through the urethra, or tube through which the urine leaves the bladder. The operator fishes around until he gets the stone between the two jaws of the instrument and then he crushes it.

An operation for removing bladder stones was one of the first to be devised by primitive surgeons. A knife was driven up from the crotch into the bladder and then the stone was pulled out with the help of a special forceps. Samuel Pepys, the great diarist, on a certain date each year used to celebrate the anniversary of his operation for "the stone."

Spasmodic Torticollis

People write asking what to do for a terrible wry neck (torticollis). Sometimes it is so bad that the person has to sit or walk holding his jaw with one hand. If he did not do this, the head would be drawn down against one shoulder. The other day I saw a man walking along the street, holding his head in line with the handle of his umbrella.

Torticollis is a miserable disease, the causes of which are poorly understood. In many cases the patient is a bunch of nerves and the best hunch is that his nervousness is the cause. In some cases, the trouble seems to be due to hysteria, which is a nervous disease. In these cases the person could get well if he wanted to bad enough. Sometimes surgeons operate and cut the contracted and shortened and stiff muscles, but this does not always work well. I remember once hearing one of America's greatest surgeons telling how, in one operation, he had cut all the big muscles in the side of the neck which could pull the head down, and still the head was drawn down.

About all I can advise the patient with this disease to do is to go to a good neurologist and take his advice.

Coon Would Amend Hells Canyon Bill

Washington—(U.P.)—Rep. Sam Coon (R-Ore.) said Monday he will seek to amend the Hells Canyon power bill to reserve 400,000 kilowatts of power for the state of Oregon.

"I don't think that the Hells Canyon bills sponsored by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) and Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) are fair to our state," Coon said in a statement. "I want to see Oregon get its fair share of power from this federal dam if it is to be built."

Bills for construction of a single federal dam at Hells Canyon on the Oregon-Idaho border have been approved by the House and Senate Interior Committees. The legislation is waiting House and Senate action.

Second Youth Held In Death of Man, 53

Portland—(U.P.)—Portland police have booked a second teenage youth in connection with a Saturday morning street fight that resulted in the death of a crippled 53-year-old man.

Police identified the second youth as John S. Renfro, 18. He was being held as a material witness under $1000 bail.

Jerry Richard Stout, 19, was charged with the murder of John Leverson.

Leverson died in a Portland hospital early Saturday after his beaten and blood-smear body was found in the street in front of a southwest Portland apartment house.

Witnesses said Leverson had attempted to stop a street fight in front of the apartment. Police said Stout jumped from a car and kicked Leverson as he lay in the street.

Washington—(U.P.)—The Agriculture Department has reported that farmers had 16,962,000 acres of cotton in cultivation on July 1. Plantings were down 3 per cent from last year.

DOING TIME

Philadelphia—(U.P.)—Herman I. Pollock, a Philadelphia lawyer serving as chief defender for the Voluntary Defender Association since 1943, estimates the time he's spent in Moyamensing Prison talking to clients as just short of three years.

Civil Defense PA Equipment Available

Washington—(U.P.)—A new line of public address equipment specifically designed for civil defense is now available for purchase under the federal-state matching funds program, the Federal Civil Defense Administration has announced.

The lightweight, battery-powered voice amplifiers have been certified as meeting FCDA standards.

The portable, self-contained equipment may be used by civil defense field personnel to supplement warnings given by sirens, to give radiological fall-out information, prevent panic and disorder, relay emergency instruction, direct rescue operations and control traffic among other things, the FCDA said.

The equipment includes megaphones capable of voice projection up to half a mile, more powerful, two-unit megaphone systems, speaker systems easily mounted on command, police and rescue trucks, dual purpose systems that may be mounted on vehicles or hand-carried and speaker systems equipped with stands and remote microphone for public address.

Further information concerning the equipment may be obtained from the FCDA, Battle Creek, Mich.

Hollywood—(U.P.)—Europe is coming up with busy beauties such as Diana Dors and Gina Lollobrigida to please American fans, but at least one local glamour girl is in favor of everybody forgetting front curves for the back ones.

Rita Moreno is today's leader of the favor in the campaign in favor of the "going away look." Periodically Humphrey Bogart and other actors deplore America's preoccupation with sweater measurements, but girls like Diana keep rising to fame.

Rita, however, is determined to take another swipe at the idea.

Conscious of Bosoms

"America is too bosom conscious," she said seriously. "Little girls who have small bosoms feel they're nothing—they're getting horrible complexes over something they can do nothing about."

"Believe me, when guys stand on the corner and watch the girls go by, they whistle at the front view but they look longest at the back view."

Rita (who measures 34-21-35) got carried away by this theory when she recently entertained with disc jockey Johnny Grant's troupe in Korea and Japan. She discovered "Oriental girls are among the most feminine in the world—and they have little bosoms."

"You should hear American men talk about how wonderful they are!" she said. "I talked with the Japanese girls to learn what their fascination is to men. Their gestures are so delicate. American women are becoming too aggressive."

Body Doesn't Count

"After all, it's the woman who counts, not the body, anyway," she added.

Rita showed me a trunkful of Oriental fabrics she brought back to be made into back-clings
