

US Occupation of Okinawa, Bonin Isles Spawning Anti-American Sentiment Wave

By RUTHERFORD POATS
United Press Correspondent
 Tokyo — (U.P.) — The United States occupation of Okinawa and the Bonin Islands is spawning a growth of anti-American sentiment in Japan which has spread from the peasants to the press and into the highest circles of government.

Most observers are convinced that the conservative government lost ground in recent elections because of its failure to oppose the U. S. occupation program.

Spurred by the election setback, the attitude of the people, and public attacks by the press, the government has indicated it will adopt a tougher stand against the U. S. occupational government in the Ryukyu Islands.

Occupation Compared
 Anti-American elements compare the United States occupation of Okinawa with the Russian occupation of the Kuriles and Sakhalin in the north. The Japanese press has frequently denounced the occupation as an example of American "colonialism."

Landowners dispossessed by the occupation and the establishment of U. S. military bases complain constantly about their separation from the soil for which they have an almost fanatical attachment.

The anti-American sentiment developed to a degree that Lt. Gen. James E. Moore, U. S. deputy governor of the Ryukyu Islands, hurried to Tokyo Thursday to confer with his chief Far East commander, Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer. The conferences were believed to center on the Okinawa land controversy.

Treaty Rights
 The United States got Okinawa and other Ryukyu islands and the Bonins including Iwo Jima under the 1951 San Francisco peace treaty. It gave the United States "the right to exercise all and any powers of administration, legislation, and jurisdiction over the territory and the inhabitants" of the islands. Washington has consistently rejected all Japanese appeals for a looser U. S. reign on the islands. The U. S. Congress recently announced plans to take over another 12,000 acres of Okinawan land.

The area will be used to expand military bases. It will be acquired for "indefinite use" through a single rental payment plan.

The U. S. government has promised to return the islands to Japanese rule when U. S. defense needs in the Far East permit. But privately government officials believe that day is not near.

The United States has officially rejected suggestions of turning over government of the Ryukyus to Japan while retaining base rights.

"The bases are so interspersed and interlocked with the civilian community that it would be impossible to separate responsibility and rights," a high U. S. official told United Press. He pointed out that military roads, pipelines and power lines run through civilian areas to serve base areas.

Complex System
 "The whole base complex can not be effective unless we have full right to us the island for offensive and defensive operations, staging troops and for expansion of four facilities when the military situation requires," the official said.

American military administrators on Okinawa have worked hard to offset Japanese feelings against the occupation.

They point out that there is almost no unemployment in the entire Ryukyu Islands, and that 45,000 jobs have been provided by U. S. forces and contractors.

Living standards have improved and are now higher than ever under Japanese rule of the islands. Bank deposits are higher, living standards have been raised and the death rate has dropped.

By the end of this fiscal year, the American-financed school building program will have provided schools for every child in the islands.

But land is the basic fact of life on an island crowded with 800 persons per square mile and a tradition of almost fanatical attachment to the soil. When additional land seizures and "indefinite" rental practices go into effect late this year, the United States may find the tough talk from Japan tough enough to pose a major Far East political problem.

Coast Guard Must Return Seaman Papers

San Francisco — (U.P.) — Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy ordered the Coast Guard Thursday to return sailing papers to seamen and dockworkers adjudged security risks by the Coast Guard's outlawed screening program.

The U. S. Court of Appeals ruled last year that the Coast Guard's screening procedures were illegal.

Murphy, in an order enforcing the appellate ruling, instructed the Coast Guard it could not interfere with the employment of seamen and dockworkers and must issue validation stamps to them.

However, in cases involving men found to be security risks under the old screening process, Murphy ruled the Coast Guard may stamp their sailing papers as "validated by order of the U. S. District Court."

The nation's cars, buses and trucks logged 590 billion vehicle miles during 1955.

OCCUPATIONAL HAZARD

Uxbridge, England — (U.P.) — Frederick Wood, 74, was jailed for a year Thursday for stealing a watch. He testified he had spent 57 of the past 58 years in prison. "I don't do it because I like it," Wood said. "If I could find a job I'd stick to it."
