Potpourri

If central and eastern Oregon counties would like a week of summer storms and rain along about the middle of next July, we'll set our 1957 camping trip for that time. Last year Potpourri and pappy set forth July 5 and it snowed, rained and was cold and windy for the first two days; this year we camped July 9-12 and it rained part of every single day.

But the sun shone every morning, the wild flowers were out in gorgeous array and the people we met were friendly.

This year the two of us drove down into the Burns cattle-raising country where the name of Pete French is still well-known. For twenty-five years or so just before the turn of the century Pete French dominated a cattle kingdom so vast that his name and his exploits are now legendary and a biographical novel was written about French as recently as 1951. When French was alive and one of the west's important figures, such names as Rye Smith's Happy Valley, Rock Creek ranch, Sod House, Shirk's ranch, the P ranch, and Roaring Springs ranch were familiar to everyone in that part of Oregon. These colorful names are still found on maps, mail boxes and ranch signs.

A settlement, Frenchglen, was named after Pete French and his father-in-law, Dr. Hugh Glenn of Sacramento, Calif., who started Pete on his cattle empire-building. As the jeep approached the present-day Frenchglen, we saw a sign which read "Frenchglen Hotel—Meals—Rooms—Horses; Free Coffee and Information." We found a small-old fashioned white hotel, and sure enough, across the road a corral with horses in it.

Later that afternoon we drove across the high sage-covered Catlow desert. For miles and miles between Frenchglen and Hart Mountain the endless sagebrush, an occasional clump of wildflowers and every now and then an abandoned homesteader's shack. And of course the cattle—steak, fat, white-faced cows, steers and calves who give the lie to the apparent desolation. The cattle kingdom which Pete French founded still provides the major share of the wealth and income of that part of Oregon.

Part of the fun of our trip this year was taking colored pictures of wild flowers. Pappy is the photographer—we just watch the roadside for beautiful and interesting specimens. One we were delighted to find was the Mariposa tulip or lily, which is in the same family as the familiar mouse ears of this section but larger and showier.

We also photographed a low-growing desert flower with a white blossom about the size and shape of a wild rose, and which we cannot find in our wild flower book. Pictures of the bright-yellow money flowers growing along the banks of Rock creek high up on Hart mountain, and several others were added to the collection started early this spring.

Except for the large mosquitoes which left a ring of bumps around the edge of our hair and the neck of our sweat shirt, Potpourri found the camp site on Hart mountain completely delightful. The spot, in a grove of aspen, provides practically all the comforts of home, what with cold running water in the creek, a hot spring bath house, down the mountain a brief way and even "sanitary facilities" which some thoughtful agency or administration erected, complete with the two customary little signs. We understand that this is the place where the bow and arrow hunters camp each year during the annual deer season hunt arranged for them by the game commission.

Red Cross Meeting Held; Awards Presented

The annual Red Cross meeting of the Jackson County Chapter was held at the Medford Country club Thursday. Benediction was given by the Rev. George Bolster and the meeting was presided over by the chapter chairman, Eugene Thorndike.

The main speaker for the luncheon was Hugo Del Pero, disaster chairman of Yuba City, Calif. Mr. Del Pero, in his talk, brought to life the nightmare and horror the residents of Yuba City experienced during the December floods of last year. In a city without cooking facilities, drinking water or sanitation, the audience heard how teams of Red Cross workers completely fed the city.

"From the beginning of the flood period up to the present time," said Mr. Del Pero, the Red Cross has spent over five million dollars in Yuba City; helping families who lost all of their possessions and giving financial aid to people who needed repair work done before they could reopen their businesses. The aid which the Red Cross gave to Yuba City did not stop with the receding of the water," he added, "but has continued over the months."

Mr. Del Pero stated that there is an average of 300 disasters in the country in one year.

Following the talk, a short business meeting was held at which time new board members were listed. The new members included: Mrs. John N. Winton, Mrs. Earl Jessy, Miss Hazel Swayne, Mrs. F. E. Holt, Mrs. Robert W. Shepherd, Col. Arthur M. Savard, Col. H. J. Taylor, and Mrs. Charles Babcock.
