Arizona Scores In Colorado River Fight With Calif.

San Francisco — UPI — Arizona scored a victory in its fight over rights to Colorado river water Friday when Special Master Simon H. Rifkind denied a motion by California to strike the testimony of an Arizona witness.

The witness was William Gookin, San Carlos Irrigation district water engineer from Coolidge, Ariz., who earlier had testified that there was an annual water loss on the Gila river of one million acre feet.

Chief counsel Ely Northcutt of California was seeking to establish Gookin's testimony as "erroneous testimony" during cross-examination.

In effect, Rifkind's ruling meant that the special master accepted Gookin's testimony as an expert as evidence in the complex suit.

Out of court, Ely said California would have to "rebut" Gookin's testimony in the presentation of its case. He also said the ruling in no way reflected the weight Rifkind might give the testimony at the conclusion of the trial.

Arizona is seeking clear title to 3,800,000 annual acre feet of the Colorado river's water. California claims it is entitled to 5,363,000 acre feet per year. There is not enough water in the river to satisfy both claims.

The states of Nevada, Utah and New Mexico and the United States government are also parties in the action.
