Should Tonsils Come Out?

A woman of 50 comes in to tell me that she has been having some sore throat, especially in winter months, and now a physician wants to remove her tonsils. Her good old family doctor says, "No." He sees no sense in it. Naturally, the woman is puzzled. She wonders if anything serious will happen if she doesn't have her tonsils out, or if something will go wrong in her throat if she does accept the operation.

All I can tell her is that a number of persons, including myself, have made statistical studies of hundreds or thousands of persons—usually children—who have had their tonsils removed. We have tried to see why some of the persons got good results while many of them did not get any results.

Practically all the men who have made these statistical studies have come to the conclusion that the essential thing is not the size of the tonsils or what they look like but how often they get inflamed. If a person has repeated sore throat with inflammation of the tonsils, then these nodules of tissue had better come out. In my series of several hundred cases in adults, I found that when the person rarely had a sore throat he seldom got anything out of his tonsillectomy. He was no different after it than he was before. As everyone knows, a tonsillectomy is most likely to help a child; it seldom is of much value to an adult. For years, physicians thought that the removal of tonsils would cure arthritis, but gradually they came to see that this operation rarely helps persons with either the rheumatoid or the senescent types of arthritis, which are so common and so disabling.

There is some evidence to indicate that the tonsillar tissue was placed in our throats for a purpose—to help in protecting us from infection, and hence it is unwise to remove tonsils that are not causing disease or discomfort.

No Further Legal Action in Lane Case

Salem—U.P.—Gov. Elmo Smith has in formed Lane county District Attorney Eugene Venn that he had been informed by the attorney general that no further legal action could be taken in the Lane county grand jury investigation.

Venn had asked the governor for a status report on the probe and the governor in turn had requested an opinion from Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton.

The governor quoted Thornton as saying: "It is my opinion that this office has completely discharged its legal duties in this matter under your directives. Unless the district attorney has obtained some new evidence to offer, it appears to me that there is nothing further that either you or I can legally do."

Mrs. K. M.—I want to take care of my invalid brother.

Frank J.—Nobody hesitates to warn me that I could drop dead at any moment.

Mrs. K. M.—I am terribly worried about my brother who recently had a serious heart attack. His wife has always been sort of light-headed, and I don't think she can take care of him properly. Meals have always been irregular in her home. If she feels like watching TV all night and sleeping half of the next day, she does so. My brother is a good-natured fool and gives the children their breakfast the next day.

The doctor says Frank can have some light exercise so she lets him go shopping for her. When I told her I didn't think Frank should be allowed to carry anything, she turned on me and said she loves Frank more than I do and what do I mean by meddling, etc. . . .

I want Frank to come and live with me so I can take good care of him until he is stronger. This he refuses to do. I want him to know what it's like to live in a well-ordered home and to be waited on the way a convalescent should be, but he just says he's getting along well enough. I think it's just pride that stops him. How can I make him understand that for his life's sake he should come to me?

Frank J.—It's true that my wife is not a very good housekeeper and she has some odd ways, according to my sister's standards, but in spite of what my sister thinks, my wife has been a good nurse. She follows the doctor's orders, never lets me forget my medicines and such things. I am very much aware of my condition and would never carry anything too heavy for me, but my sister gets hysterical if I make a move—and incidentally, this is true of half my relatives and friends.

Nobody hesitates to warn me that I could drop dead at any moment and that so-and-so died
