

Britain, France Refuse To Recognize Seizure of Suez Canal

London — (AP) — Britain and France refused today to recognize Egypt's seizure of the Suez Canal. Government officials in both countries said it was an emergency measure to meet counter action against the sudden Egyptian move. Egypt promptly declared that it will allow no international body to question its seizure of the canal. Egyptian Prime Minister Abdul Nasser said in Cairo: "No international organization is entitled to take up Egypt's nationalization of the Suez Canal Company which by law is purely an Egyptian company."

Reaction in London and Paris was angry against Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser's announcement of the seizure in a speech in Alexandria Thursday. The Egyptian move was clearly made in retaliation against the Western withdrawal of offers to help finance building of the $1,300,000,000 Aswan dam to harness the Nile. Parliament was furious and there were demands that the government meet "force with force." Prime Minister Anthony Eden condemned Nasser's "nationalization" of the Suez Canal as "arbitrary." But he withheld any action pending emergency consultation with the United States.

France and the nations of the British Commonwealth. In Paris, French Premier Guy Mollet summoned an emergency cabinet meeting. At its end, French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau told newsmen: "The French government absolutely could not accept the unilateral measure decided by Colonel Nasser. The nationalization of the Suez Canal considerably harms the rights and interests of Frenchmen." In Washington, State Department officials declined to comment until they could make a more detailed study. But it was evident they were taken by surprise.
