Star-Bound Man Must Take His Own Gravity

Berkeley, Calif.—(U.P.)—If and when man takes off for the stars, he'll need to take with him his own gravity, his own atmosphere and even his own night and day.

That's the opinion of Dr. Nello Pace, a physiology professor at the University fo California. He suggests that the solution of how and what man is to breathe on the long journey into space may be solved by taking along a sort of atmospheric garden.

He points out that tiny green plants would supply the atmosphere with oxygen and use up the carbon dioxide which man normally exhales. The problem of a suitable atmosphere still remains, Pace said, because man cannot survive on pure oxygen over a long period of time.

As for gravity, the physiologist maintains that no research has shown whether humans can get along with a complete absence of gravitational pull. Once out of the earth's pull, two of the three orienting sense organs now dependent on gravity would be useless.

Both of the sense organs, the canals in the inner ear and nerve receptors in the muscles, would not function and man would have is eyes alone to guide him.

Even night and day might have to be provided, Pace noted, since it appears man needs some kind of a cycle or change to help him function best.

Michigan's capital city of Lansing almost was named Frogville after it was chosen by the state legislature. Other names considered included Houghton, Polk and Tartarus.

Emotional Shock Ruled Compensable

Buffalo, N.Y.—(U.P.)—An unusual ruling in workmen's compensation court here designated that emotional shock suffered at work was compensable.

Referee John J. Carogana made the ruling in the case of William Lyman, 35, a grain mill worker.

Lyman claimed he and another worker become emotionally upset when a co-worker was killed accidentally.

The death victim suffocated after he fell from a bos'n chair while being lowered into a bin at the mill. He landed in a grain pile about 35 feet below.

Lyman said that when he was told of the accident he became so upset that he fell to his knees and "broke out crying." He required hospital care for shock.

Carogana ruled that the incident constituted an accident, the same as when someone is injured because of "horseplay" on a job.

Buddhist fishermen of Ceylon refuse to kill anything, even an insect. Of their profession, the devout say they do not really kill the fish—they just take them out of the water.

The mongoose is not immune to the venom of the deadly snakes it kills and eats. Keen vision and lightning agility enable it to evade their poison fangs.
