Undersecy. of State Robert Murphy, are shown in London, where they opened talks on the Egyptian seizure of the Suez Canal. They have outlined plans for joint naval action should the crisis blow up before finding a compromise with Egypt.

Smuggling of Strategic Goods To Red China Slowed

Hongkong.—(U.P.)—The smuggling of strategic goods to Communist China from Hongkong has slowed to a comparative trickle, according to informed sources. But gold is a different story.

In a survey on smuggling, these facts emerged:

There simply are not enough junks to transport more than 8,000 tons of contraband from Hongkong to the mainland during one year. The actual figure is said to be smaller. But 8,000 tons is just about what one good-sized freighter could carry on one trip.

The government's department of commerce and industry has expanded its preventative service during the past three years to cope with smuggling. The number of personnel has been raised 80 per cent, the number of highspeed patrol boats has doubled.

Gold A Problem

The major item of contraband is kerosene, which is used in jet planes. But British officials contend that the amount smuggled into China from Hongkong couldn't fuel up a two-plane air force. The best guess is that the kerosene is needed for home cooking. It is cheap and the only fuel which a coolie or peasant has facilities for using.

About 1,500 tons of kerosene were seized last year by revenue agents.

The gold situation is different and far tougher to solve.

Hongkong actually is a two-way street for gold. It arrives here by commercial airliner, mostly from Australia, quite open and above board.

It is then shipped to Portuguese Macao, 40 miles away, by steam. Portugal is not a member of the International Monetary Fund, and the gold market is legal in Macao.

When the gold reaches Macao consigned to the gold syndicate headquartered there, it is channelled into an illegal market and shipped back to Hongkong aboard junks. Then the gold is put aboard freighters bound for Southeast Asia and India, the major markets.

Bought By Peasants

About $65,000,000 worth of gold is handled annually this way. The Macao government collects 45 cents of Macao's annual income.

If gold smuggling is ever effectively choked off, Macao's economy would be in desperate straits. British Hongkong knows it.

British officials claim the gold does not fall into the hands of international syndicates when it is smuggled out of Hongkong. Virtually all of it is bought by coolies and peasants to whom gold

Marine Scientists Probe Life Secrets of Sailfish

Washington.—Sailfish, silver and blue acrobats of the sport-fish world, would roam in fantastic numbers but for natural raiders upon eggs and young.

Studies by the National Geographic Society and the University of Miami's Marine Laboratory show that a single female may spawn 4,675,000 eggs and swim indifferently away. Such life secrets of the sailfish are revealed by Gilbert Voss of the Laboratory staff.

Florida sailfish spawn in late spring and early summer in shallow water along Florida's shores. Heavy with roe, the females become sluggish fighters. The eggs scatter among the plankton, tiny animal and vegetable matter in the sea, and float northward in the Gulf Stream, where predators take their toll.

Become Feeders Themselves

Surviving baby sailfish soon devour small mollusks and fish. "One greedy specimen, all of three-quarters of an inch long, including bill, had a viperfish nearly as long as itself coiled up in its stomach," writes Voss.

Learning to fend for themselves, the sailfish work inshore. During the summer, juveniles five to eight inches long are found off the Carolina coast. They turn south when northerly winds and cold weather come. Five- or six-foot lengths are attained within a year. Eight feet is about the maximum length for the Atlantic species.

Solving life secrets of fish entails painstaking work. "While we have learned a great deal about fresh-water fishes, our knowledge of their marine cousins can at best be considered a scientific Swiss cheese, full of blank spaces," Voss says.

Simpson, of the firm of Simpson and Curtin, pointed out that rapid expansion in the use of automobiles has "deteriorated travel conditions so that transit's ability to offer speed, convenience and comfort is rapidly declining."

He stated that, while he is not opposed to the construction of urban expressways, "quite inadequate attention" has been paid the problem of dispersing expressway traffic on surface streets.

"It is estimated that we can sketch the life histories of fewer than one out of a hundred of all ocean fishes."

The Miami Laboratory has examined some 25,000 larval fish, along with thousands of eggs. Meticulous classification has broken the riddle of 11 species.

Since the joint study began in January, 1953, scientists have frequently gone detective-life to sea, seeking baby fish among the multitudinous creatures in the plankton.

"We even do some fishing ashore," Voss says. "Since fish larvae are eaten by nearly everything that swims, including their own parents, we often examine at the docks the stomachs of fish brought in by fishing boats. We have obtained baby fishes in perfect shape, like the three-inch sailfish complete with bill and sail we took from a dolphin."

Weird Sea Life Crops Up

Tinier specimens are examined under microscopes. Meticulous drawings of various-aged fish relate their stages of growth, until a complete life history unfolds.

Amidst the routine, numerous weird sea creatures pass under scrutiny — hatchet fish that flash gold and silver sides and rows of light organs; viperfish that flaunt saberlike teeth; lantern fish with headlights evolved to attract prey.

From the Marine Laboratory's studies is coming greater knowledge of the migration routes of game fish and commercial species, benefiting the fishing industry alike.
