

Mill Residue Study Results Announced

A joint survey by the Oregon Forest Products Laboratory and the Pacific Northwest Forest and Range Experiment Station has been published in the April information circular, which they sponsor every month, concerning mill residues in Jackson, Linn and Lincoln counties.

The articles on the three county's mill residue production were written by S. E. Corder, of the Oregon Forest Products Laboratory, Corvallis, and D. R. Gedney, of the USFS Pacific Northwest Forest and Range Experiment Station in Portland.

Purpose of Study

Purpose of the study was to learn the quantity of mill residue potentially available for use in three counties of western Oregon. Emphasis was placed on coarse residue because of the immediate possibility of converting it to pulp or fiber. Fine residue was reported as volume of sawdust or shavings produced.

The field survey of sawmills was conducted in the three counties in September 1955. All known sawmills with a capacity of over 40 M feet, board measure per eight-hour shift, were visited in each of the three counties. About 15 per cent of smaller mills were contacted for information to use in estimating data for the entire group of small mills.

Coarse residue was recorded as that from sulfite-pulp species and that from other species. Other uses consisted mainly of use for fuel. Fine residue was listed as used chiefly for fuel.

Results of Survey

Results of the survey determined that if all the coarse residue from sawing lumber produced in Oregon in 1955 were available, the total volume developed would amount to 387,000 tons from sulfite-pulp species and 2,671,000 tons from other species.

At the estimated rate in 1955, 54,000 tons of residue from sulfite-pulp species and 805,000 tons from other species was being used for pulp or board manufacture.

The survey showed there were 11 sawmills in Jackson county with capacities over 80 M fm per shift, 13 mills with capacities from 40 to 80 M fm per shift, and 53 sawmills with capacities less than 40 M per shift. The rate of lumber production in 1955 was 881 MM fm per year, it reported.

Nons Used for Pulp

According to the survey no mill residue was used for pulp because of high transportation costs to the pulp plants.

Seven per cent of the coarse residue from true firs and hemlock was used for fuel or remanufacturing, and 93 per cent, 78,000 tons per year, was not used. The total coarse residue from true firs and hemlock, 86,000 tons per year, could supply a sulfite-pulp production of 123 tons of pulp per day.

The survey continued that Jackson county was producing sawdust at the rate of 237,000 tons per year. Twenty-eight per cent was used for fuel or agricultural uses and 72 per cent was not used.

National Forest

In Jackson county the National forests contained the great bulk of the sulfite-pulp types, the survey showed. They contained almost twice the area of the sulfite-pulp types that occurred in either the private or other public holdings. The other public holdings were made up principally of the O and C revested land grants and small areas of public domain, county and state-owned land.

The study disclosed there was a rather rapid increase in the rate of lumber production for the county between 1945 and 1955. The forest resource inventory indicated lumber production probably could not be sustained at the production rate in 1955.

Lumber production from sulfite-pulp species was not significant prior to 1945; since then it became an increasingly large part of the total lumber production, according to the survey.

Teachers Complete 3-Week Workshop

Ryder Berg, chemistry teacher at Medford High school, and Raymond Graves, social studies teacher at Hedrick Junior High school, were two of the more than 1,000 teachers from Oregon schools who have completed a three weeks' workshop at the University of Oregon.

The workshop was devoted to a study of the curriculum of the public schools that has been in progress for a year and a half. Reports from 97 field committees were studied and compiled by the group workshop to set in motion a state-wide program for continuing curriculum revisions.

The workshop was sponsored jointly by the University of Oregon, the state department of education, and local school districts which sent teacher representatives.

Eagle Point Girl Leads Porky Eradication Contest

Clara Jean Fink, 12-year-old from Eagle Point, led entrants in the porcupine eradication contest sponsored by Medford Kiwanis club and the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce at the end of the first month.

Clara had turned in 47 porcupine noses at the county clerk's office.

Contestants are also allowed to turn in noses at the Prospect office of Elk Lumber company, but a list could not be obtained from there for today's paper.

83 Noses In

Records kept by the chamber of commerce show that a total of 83 noses were turned in which will count for the contest. The porcupines were killed by eight county boys and girls.

Aside from Clara, other contestants and their porcupine nose count for the first month included Ronald Scholer, 12, of star route box 77, Ashland, with 10; Jim Stever 12, of 248 Mace rd., with 9; Ginger Munday, 14, of route 1, box 147, Gold Hill, with 7; Samuel Barker Jr., 12, of route 2, box 361-A, Gold Hill, with 3; Garry L.
