Cymbeline Brings Audience Response

It is doubtful if many persons in the audience who saw "Cymbeline" Saturday night in the Oregon Shakespearean festival theater had ever attended a performance of the play before. It is seldom produced, and it was the first time the Ashland festival had ever presented this particular work. Now that the first presentation is an accomplished fact, one wonders why the play is not given oftener.

True, the plot is a bit time-worn, and the entire play verges on melodrama, but nevertheless, it does have appeal and the response of the audience Saturday night testifies to this.

Romantic Play Those unfamiliar with "Cymbeline" should not be deceived by the full title which reads "The Tragedy of Cymbeline." The play is not tragic but romantic, it has much humor and it has a happy ending. Some volumes of Shakespeare in fact do not even list it as a tragedy and Director B. Iden Payne makes no comment on this in his program notes.

The Ashland festival is most fortunate in having Director Payne for this production. Payne, native of England, has a long and distinguished background in Shakespearean theater, in both England and this country, and when festival patrons see "Cymbeline" they see a play directed by a noted authority. Payne directed John Barrymore in his first success in a serious role, has directed at the Shakespeare Memorial Theater at Stratford-upon-Avon, England, (including productions of "Cymbeline") and was director for the first four seasons of the Old Globe theater in San Diego, Calif.

Combination Good The combination of Director Payne and Actress Joan Kugell is almost most fortunate. Miss Kugell, an actress of genuine talent, plays the leading role of Imogen with such appeal that there could hardly be anyone in the audience who did not respond. Imogen is a fine woman, a true princess and a devoted wife; these characteristics Miss Kugell portrays with clarity and finesse.

Playing opposite Miss Kugell is Steve Pavlin as Pothugus Leonatos, husband of Imogen. Pavlin has the difficult role of a husband who believes his wife, in whom he had the utmost faith, has been casually unfaithful, and for the most part he is equal to his assignment in the play. However, he is occasionally a bit stiff and his voice sometimes lacks the control which is required for his scenes of great emotion late in the play.

Don Gunderson is cast as the deceitful and sophisticated Iachimo who plots to discredit Imogen in the eyes of her husband. Gunderson, who played Richard night last Wednesday, is a convincing and interesting Iachimo. This versatile actor completely changes his manner and appearance with each role—only his rich, vibrant voice was recognizable Saturday night.

Not Disappointed Much of the humor of "Cymbeline" depends upon the character of Cloten, son of the queen, played by William Oylter. Festival audiences look forward to Oylter's comedy portrayals, and are not disappointed this year. Cloten is an over-bearing, vain and altogether silly person and Oylter, nose in air and practically a tip-toe with his own importance, gives a thoroughly delightful performance.

"Cymbeline" has many subordinate characters which are important to the tapestry of the plot, and these are all well done. David O'Brien makes an excellent King Cymbeline, Lindy Gordon, whose diction is a joy to hear, deserves praise for her forceful playing of the hypocritical queen and Lee Haring gives a sympathetic portrayal of the faithful Pisanio, servant to Posthumus.

Brad Curtis, important to the festival company both as a musician and a capable actor, plays Belarius, the banished lord who has raised Cymbeline's two sons as his own. Cast as the sons are Ted van Griethuysen and Eberle Thomas. The former makes the most of his minor role; Thomas has a good stage presence but tends to rush his lines.

Complement Character Shakespeare's plays are famous for what Director Payne calls "character-vignettes" and one of these is the gaoler, played by Philip Jacobus. It is a small scene, quickly over, but the audience will remember Jacobus' playing of it. Richard Cavette also has a tiny role, that of a

Graham Execution Indefinitely Delayed

Denver — (U.P.)—The scheduled execution of John Gilbert Graham, convicted of the airliner dynamiting that killed 44 persons, was indefinitely postponed today with the filing of introductory documents for an appeal to the Colorado Supreme court.

Graham was scheduled to die in Colorado's gas chamber the week of Aug. 26.

The court clerk said Graham's three attorneys have 20 days in which to file a direct appeal to their client's conviction of first degree murder in the death of his mother, Mrs. Daisie King, 54. Mrs. King was one of 44 persons killed in an explosion of a United Air Lines Mainliner near Longmont, Colo., last Nov. 1.

Hanna Employees Ask Bargaining Unit

Roseburg — (U.P.)—Some employees of the strike-bound Hanna Nickel Smelting company of Riddle have taken a petition to the National Labor Relations board asking they be allowed to set up a separate bargaining unit.

About 30 employees of the Hanna Coal and Ore Corp., a subsidiary of the smelting company, said they feel their present union, local 5074 of the United Steelworkers of America, is not adequately representing them.

About 50 miners employed by the subsidiary mining company are members of the same local as the 425 striking employees of the Hanna Nickel Smelting company.

One-Car Accident Injures Five People This Morning

Five people were injured when a car, operated by Anthony Andrew Rambo, 22, Butte Falls, went out of control and turned over at approximately 12:50 a.m. today on Highway 62 about one mile north of the Big Y. state police reported.

Released after hospital treatment for minor injuries were Rambo, Dean L. Bush Jr., 20, Butte Falls, and Jackie Ann Edwards, 18, Prospect. Mrs. Myrtle Rambo, 20, Butte Falls, wife of the driver, and Bush's 18-year-old wife, Josie, are still confined to Sacred Heart hospital with lacerations and bruises.

Traveling North State police said the car was traveling north about 70 miles per hour and approached a curve, when the car hit the right shoulder of the highway. Rambo pulled the wheel hard and the car traveled across the highway, over a 10-foot shoulder and proceeded 94 feet through an orchard. Officers said the car rolled over once and landed on its top 43 feet from the edge of the highway. One pear tree was knocked down in the accident.
