Electroshock Treatments

Many persons want to know how electroshock treatments are given, will they hurt at the time, will they do harm, and can they do good? If so, in what type of mental illness do they do good? At a recent big convention some psychiatrists were accused by their fellows of electroshock treatments to almost all of their patients, just on general principles. Many psychiatrists criticize this practice, and said that, in their experience, about the only type of patient who is benefited by electroshocks is the one who is depressed and melancholic and "blue." They doubted if a psychiatrist was fair to his patient if he gave the shock treatments without a preliminary study, and they did not think much of a psychiatrist who never talked to patients, but just gave them electroshocks.

In cases of mental depression I have seen miracles performed with the help of mild electroshocks. Persons who had been prostrated for a year went right back to work. In other cases in which the person was not primarily depressed, neither the family nor I could see that any good was done. A few of the patients who had had many treatments complained for a while of some failure of memory.

Strong Current Unnecessary

There are a number of types of apparatus used in the treatment, and a number of types of current. In the old days when strong currents were used and a big convulsion was produced, bones were sometimes broken. Today, with the use of much weaker currents and the avoidance of a convulsion, I seldom see a broken bone. I doubt if this is necessary because I have seen such good results from treatments with gentle currents which hardly convulse the patient at all. Some psychiatrists just touch the button of the apparatus for a moment, the patient instantly becomes unconscious; he stiffens out, and this is all. In half an hour or so he may get up and go home with his relatives.

Some men who know that the patient cannot feel anything, do not give any preliminary medication, while others, knowing that many persons are very apprehensive and afraid, give first a little anesthesia. Many psychiatrists put the patient in the hospital overnight, while others have the patient come into the hospital only to stay for half an hour in the treatment room. A few give the treatment in their offices, which greatly lessens the expense.

Some men will give three or four treatments, and then if the patient is no better, they quit. Other men will go on and give 20 or 30 treatments, even if the patient shows no sign of improvement. This, I suspect, is a mistake.

Many patients have a little impairment of memory for a while after the treatment, but especially when the person gets only three or four treatments, this difficulty with memory is not likely to be distressing, and it is likely soon to clear up and go away.

If I had a depression which distressed me greatly and made it impossible for me to work, and if this depression didn't soon clear away, I would want to have some electroshock treatments. Some opponents of this treatment might say, "But you may be back again in eight or ten months, depressed," and my answer would be, "All right, I will then take some more shock treatments and try to get well again."

Exclusive Use Distressing

As some psychiatrists pointed out at the last two big meetings of the psychiatric society, it is distressing to them that some of their brethren use electroshocks excessively. They use them on practically every patient who comes in the door. They don't bother to talk to the man; they just say, "Get up on the table there and I'll give you an electroshock." Many psychiatrists think that this is wrong; and they think it is wrong, also, when a psychiatrist spends a year or two trying to analyze a person who has a depression. They think it useless to treat a

Gladstone Collision Kills One, Hurts Three

Portland — (U.P.) — A head-on collision near the community of Gladstone yesterday took the life of Mrs. Joyce Ann Harrel of Pendleton and injured three others.

Mrs. Harrel, believed to be in her late twenties, was a passenger in a car driven by her husband when it collided with a car driven by Gerald Ray Dunn, 20, Oregon City. Dunn was arrested later on a negligent homicide charge, according to county police.

Injured were Melburn Harrel, the Harrels' daughter, five-year-old Linda, and Dunn. Two other Harrel children were reported not hurt.

State police said Dunn's car apparently was in the wrong lane at the time of the collision.

Testing Starts Soon For Pre-School Group

The annual pre-school testing for under-age children who wish to enter Medford public schools will begin Aug. 20 and extend through Aug. 31, school officials announced today.

According to Oregon law, children are accepted for September entrance in the first grade if they become six years of age on or before Nov. 15. The Medford public schools will accept younger pupils who become six years of age on or before Jan. 31, 1957, providing they show a mental development of 6½ years on a mental age test.

Parents having under-age children whom they wish to enroll should call the school administration office, 3-3683, between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. to secure appointments for the test. All testing is expected to be completed prior to school opening, it was pointed out.
