Bodies of Man, Son Sought at Vancouver

Vancouver, Wash. — (U.P.) — A skin diver today searched the waters of Lake river for the bodies of a man and his son presumed drowned yesterday evening. Missing were John Johnston, 32, Vancouver, and his son, Steven, 9. Sheriff Clarence McKay said a boat carrying seven persons struck an object in the water and that the boy fell overboard. The tragedy occurred about six miles northwest of here.

'I Like Ike' Buttons Passed Out at Chicago

Chicago — (U.P.) — Two pretty girls took up posts on Michigan Blvd. today and handed out "I Like Ike" buttons. They were just two blocks from the Democratic National Convention headquarters. "Isn't it a wonderful idea," said one of them.

MONKEY BUSINESS

New Orleans — (U.P.) — Eight fugitive monkeys from a pet shop led police and several hundred volunteers on a frenzied chase Friday. Four monkeys were caught but the remaining four were still at large. The pet shop owner said a chimpanzee escaped from his cage and opened up the monkey cage. The monkeys then slipped through a tansom to freedom.

MUTT RATTLES RATTLER

New Orleans — (U.P.) — Mut, a tiny mongrel dog, held a five-foot diamondback rattlesnake at bay Friday just a few yards from where two baby girls were playing in their backyard. "He barked at it, lunged at it and kept it away until we could get someone with a hoe to kill it," said the father of the two girls and owner of three-year-old Mut.

Rep. Ellsworth Returns To Home at Roseburg

Roseburg — (U.P.) — Rep. Harris Ellsworth, Republican congressman from Oregon's fourth district, returned to his home here yesterday. Ellsworth said he planned to take a 10 day rest before launching his campaign for reelection in the November general election.

Gloomy Weather Seen For Demo Convention

Chicago — (U.P.) — The Weather Bureau predicted a rather gloomy opening for the Democratic National Convention today as far as its particular subject is concerned. The forecast was: "Partly cloudy, with a chance of thundershowers, particularly in the afternoon; continued warm."

Eisenhower's Message To GOP Convention Asks Help To Make Future Equal To Past

San Francisco — (U.P.) — President Dwight Eisenhower's message to participants in the 1956 Republican convention here Aug. 20-24 today called on them "to help make the bright promise of the party's future more than equal to its past." The President's message opened the 160-page convention program which was released today. The program called attention to the GOP's 100 years and featured the slogan, "Peace, Prosperity, Progress."

publican Senatorial committee, referred to the possible battle for the vice presidential nomination. Schoepel said: "Specifically, we are going to nominate at this convention, the incumbent, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and our vice president, Richard Nixon." Nixon's message said: "The idea that government is the servant of the people is not a new idea, but the way it has been applied for the last three and one-half years is new and we are all the better for it."

ments of the Republican party since its inception. Mr. Hoover said: "For over one hundred years of its existence, the Republican party has insisted that free enterprise is the foundation of our economic life—and of free men." The program* included welcomes from California Governor Goodwin J. Knight and San Francisco Mayor George Christopher. The Republican governor predicted "another resounding republican victory throughout the nation in November."

Hall Predicts Victory Leonard Hall, chairman of the GOP National committee, also predicted victory in the forthcoming elections. "The spirit of the 'great crusade' the president launched four years ago still warms our hearts and inspires our minds. That is why we enter this 1956 presidential campaign confident of another overwhelming victory November 6th," he said. Gov. Arthur B. Langlie of Washington, who will be the convention's keynote speaker, said: "The greatest contribution we as American citizens can make to our country is to work as never before to strengthen the foundations of the political support which will assure the continuation of the far-sighted programs which have been carried forward in the past three and one-half years and the preservation of the dignity and integrity that

St. Martin's Forest In 1895 two men swung axes in the wilderness timber to begin the clearing for a new educational enterprise of the Order of St. Benedict — whose rule of "prayer and labor" had been established 1400 years before. A shed was raised, then a chapel and living quarters. There was soon a school in the clearing. The site was eight miles from Olympia. By 1914 only 40 acres had been logged. Even in 1919, when the last of the 600 acres of old-growth forest had been cut over there was a market for only the logs of highest grade. Stacks of old windfalls and new logs were left among the stumps.

for a picture of beef stuck grazing in distant gulches, in dry air and sharp sunlight in which one could look to far pinnacles. But here it was wet weather. The 25-year-old Douglas firs were crowding the corral on all sides. It had been put up after the last logging in 1919, in a hope that the 600 acres of raw cutovers could be made over into range for 200 head of beef cattle and enough Guernseys to yield milk and butter for the 400 students, all young men of mighty appetite. But after 35 years 40 head of Aberdeen Angus and 25 milk cows were the number of the entire herd. Hundred Years' War.

After a slash burn a jungle of bracken fern, firewood, blackberry, vine maple, groundsel, salal, pearl everlasting, and other such growth came up to provide fuel for more fires. There were five sweeping fires in the 1920s. Yet within the section and around it there were Douglas fir seed trees that had survived the logging and that lived on through the burns. The Conquering Trees. Now a cow-track road winds through the young Douglas firs to an abandoned cattle corral with watering trough and calf shed. The layout was designed back in the 1920s by a priest who had a hand for cow country architecture. In my eyes, when I visited St. Martin's College, every joint of post and poles called for the scenes of sagebrush and rimrock which I'd known as a boy in Idaho. The fame of the sagging gate was

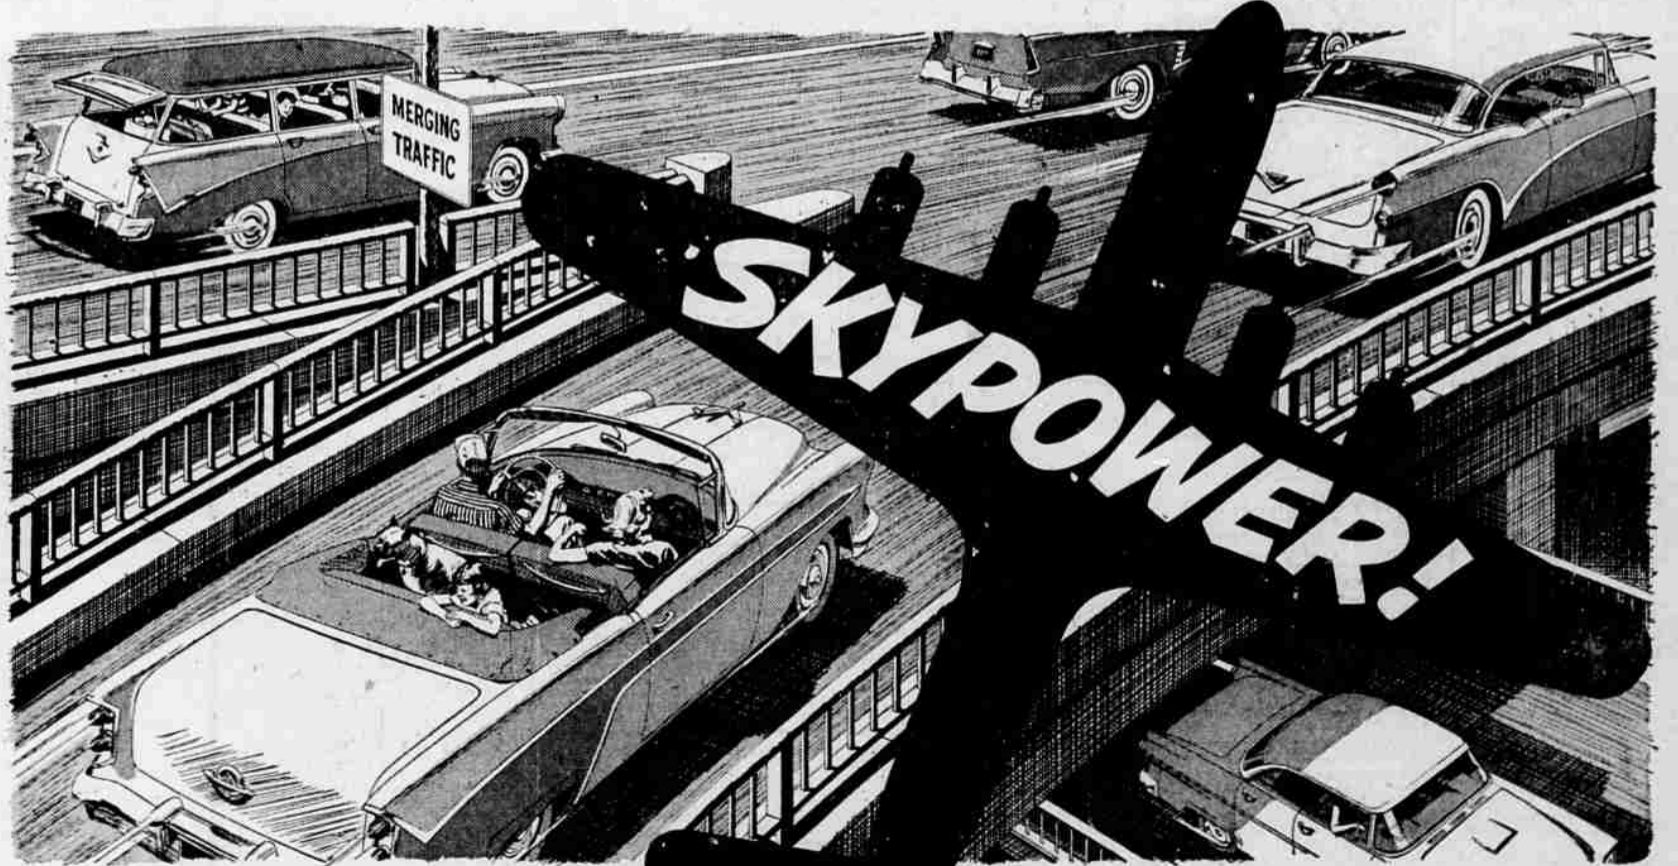

On the bottoms it has worked, for there as a rule the soil is suited to richer crops than trees. From these lowland clearings our townsites and farms were formed. The later comers had faith that they could do as well on the uplands, believing that where trees would grow anything should grow. There are still many who do not know that the tree feeds through its leaves on sunlight and air, only quenching its thirst and deriving some minerals from the ground. The modern science of soil analysis and classification rates four out of every five acres in Western Oregon and Washington as good for tree growing, poor for grass growing or for farm crops. On the land of St. Martin's soil examination began in the 1930s. Now this college is serving as a demonstration area for a land-use pattern for small forest owners of all Western Washington and Oregon.

FRANKENSTEIN DEPT. Beacon Falls, Conn. — (U.P.) — It was a poetic justice, when a town court judge imposed an $80 fine on the Waterbury Ready-Mixed Concrete company for overloading a truck. The firm was convicted by scales it helped construct.
