

Great Game of Convention Politics Kicked Off To Confused Start by Demos

Chicago — (AP) — The great game of convention politics, as played by the Democrats, was off to a confused start today. Who's in charge here, anyway? It was the late Will Rogers who sagely observed: "I am a member of no regularly organized political party. I am a Democrat."

Here everybody thought Stevenson had the nomination wrapped up and sold, and suddenly a grinning man from Missouri scrambled the whole business. The inside dope, on this first convention day, is that the show could blow wide open.

As of this instant, the field includes Honest Abe Harriman, Honest Adlai Stevenson, Honest Happy Chandler, and even — this was a wild, wild rumor — maybe Honest Harry Truman.

Even the delegates were puzzled. One Tennessean, being interviewed on radio, was asked: "How's Tennessee going?" "Don't know," he replied. "We ain't cactused yet."

One of the pressing problems as the convention got underway was whether modern electronics has made enough strides in the last four years to eliminate the glare made on TV by Chairman Sam Rayburn's bald head, shining in the spotlights. There were rumors that the chairman may leave the dulling make-up powder off his pate this year. Science is wonderful.

Best slogan of the convention thus far is the only one displayed at the "Johnston For President" headquarters: "Love That Lyndon."

Fastest switch in slogan phraseology was made by Harriman headquarters. The big signs there had said, "Harriman Can Win." But overnightly, after Mr. Truman's endorsement, they blossomed out with "Harriman Will Win."

In the lobby of the convention headquarters hotel, in the very gizzard of the Democratic party, reporters found Republican Rep. Patrick J. Hillings of California.

"Wrong convention?" a newsman asked. "Thought maybe I'd learn something," said Hillings. "I'm going right now."

Governor Harriman was introduced to a television audience as a vigorous 66-year-old and was asked how he felt. "I feel fine, but I'm not 66," said the governor. "I'm 64. But what difference does a few years

Canyonville Fire Damages Buildings

Canyonville — (AP) — Fire here yesterday afternoon destroyed a plumbing warehouse and caused extensive damage to two other business establishments and three cabins in the immediate vicinity.

"I think you're as old as you feel, and I feel mighty young."

Six fire companies from surrounding towns converged on the town to help battle the flames which broke out in the plumbing warehouse about noon. Damaged extensively were a grocery store, Harry's Super service, and the Forester's club. Three cabins, all frame structures of about three rooms, also were severely damaged by the fire.

Cause of the fire was not immediately determined.
