

ILLINOIS VALLEY Attorney General Visits

By FRANK STRICKLAND
Cave Junction — Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton, his wife and son, Tommy, were guests Thursday night of Mayor and Mrs. Elwood Hussey. The attorney general was guest of honor at dinner party at Todelope Cafe that evening where approximately 35 friends and admirers were present. Thornton, a reserve Army colonel, was en route to Camp Roberts, Calif., for two weeks active duty.

Rumors have it that a movement is being launched by influential oldtimers at Cave Junction to propose an initiative ballot asking for a popular vote in the November general election to restore the town's original name, "Cave City." It is claimed by proponents of the move that the town's first established name should be restored.

Twelve concession stands at the jubilee picnic grounds are under construction. According to builder, Phil Keller, 20 more are to be laid out in the big, shady, VFW park selected for the valley's Labor day annual celebration. A trained St. Bernard dog show, live pony rides, ladies' tug-of-war, archery range and a side show with a five-legged pig have been recently added to the program.

Summer travel on Highway 199 between Grants Pass and Crescent City, Calif., is on the increase. Eight hundred out-of-state cars in one day have been counted at Cave Junction, midway point on the 85-mile valley-to-coast route. Many travelers stop here to see Oregon Caves. Some remain in the region longer than originally planned because, as one put it, "We love your trees and rivers." Some spend all their vacation time here.

Fire insurance rates on most dwellings and certain types of business buildings in the Illinois valley have been reduced as much as 25 per cent, according to property owners. No specific reasons are advanced for the lowering of premiums other than a recent increase in fire-fighting personnel here and the purchase of some additional equipment. No major fires have occurred in the valley so far this year.

Wild blackberries are ripe in this region and pickers from 6 to 60 are seen along the rivers and other places where the seasonal delicacy grows. Containers range in size from a tin cup to three gallon buckets for harvesting "the big sweet ones," which are usually served with cream

TABLE ROCK Pear Harvesting Under Way

By R. E. NEALON
Table Rock—The harvesting of pears has started here in the two large orchards. A skeleton crew began operations at the Modoc Orchard Saturday, while the Hull Orchards began Monday with a nearly full crew.

It is expected that by next week the picking in both orchards will be in full swing with full crews. The quality of the fruit is said to be up to that of former years, and the tonnage may exceed previous years. With a big crop and good prices in prospect, local orchardists should enjoy a successful year.

Several neighbors gathered Tuesday night at the Richardson home to watch the Democratic convention proceedings and to hear the address of Sen. Wayne Morse. They were surprised to see the ovation and tremendous applause given him from delegates all over the nation, except those from the State of Georgia who disagreed with him on his civil rights stand.

We note that a local commentator overlooked the Senator's dramatic reception, but did see a couple of women in the audience chewing gum and others not paying too much attention.

In a recent conversation with Earl Weaver, manager of the Grange Coop, we were asked if we would back up all the statements made in our news stories.

We told him many of them were quotes from others, and we did not necessarily guarantee their authenticity.

He said a recent item regarding prices paid for grain by valley dealers being under the government supports was not correct. We checked and found him to be correct. It seems that support prices vary according to distances from marketing centers, and that we are in one of the lowest areas. This controversy was started from reading a recorded report of the agricultural committee of the Sams Valley Grange where Earl is a member but like many other members seldom attends, and leaves the business of trying to better farm conditions to a faithful few.

Friends here of the John Heberlings have received announcements of the arrival of John Gilbert Heberling, 7 pounds 12 ounces, Aug. 11 at their home in San Jose, Calif.

During an interview with Mrs. Abe Halfhill, Table Rock lady from the south, we learned that she is well satisfied with the Democratic delegates' choice of their standard bearers. She has been for Stevenson right along and believes that since Kefauver

Also in the party were Mrs. Elston's brother, Ray Standridge, Brawley, Calif., who works at the state experimental farm for agriculture there, visiting here for the first time in four years. Completing the crowd was another sister, Mrs. Clarence Darrow, Crescent City.

After dinner at her home, Mrs. Elston took her guests to the Illinois river for an afternoon of swimming. The girls, Ellen is a southerner himself he will understand the problems of segregation.

She says those from other parts of the country who insist on telling the southerners what to do know nothing about the situation there. The solid south should go for this ticket, is her belief, as they cannot possibly better themselves with any other party.

Charles Haas, who died recently from the effects of an automobile mishap, was at one time a resident of this community, having a large farm on the east side which is still owned and operated by the Haas family.

Also the detach of Lemuel Hughes recently at Phoenix calls to mind that he with his mother and other members of the family at one time resided in the house now occupied by the Elmo Stalling family. This farm then known as the Jennings place was leased by Mr. Hughes back about the turn of the century.
