

Special Education Services Available For Medford Pupils

Special education services are available for Medford school children who have special needs which make it difficult for them to attend regular school classes, according to Miss Louise Basford, director of special education for Medford schools.

Home teaching services, Miss Basford said, are for students who are in the hospital or confined at home with a long-term type illness (two months duration or longer), such as rheumatic fever. It does not apply to temporary illnesses such as measles, whooping cough or simple fractures. The extent of the program is dependent upon recommendation of the pupil's physician, she said.

Parents with children who have special needs should contact Miss Basford by telephone 3-3683. Physicians may have city school patients needing special educational services, and school authorities said suitable programs may be arranged for such cases.

Number of Elderly Persons in Oregon Becoming Problem

Salem—(U.P.)—The rapidly increasing number of elderly persons requiring more or less constant care either in the state hospital, nursing homes or by their families is fast becoming a major state problem, Gov. Elmo Smith has been told.

The governor conferred about the problem of seniles with Dr. Dean Brooks, state hospital superintendent; Mrs. Loia Howard Mason, public welfare administrator; Dr. Gordon C. Edwards, acting state health officer; and Dr. Willard J. Stone, Marion county health officer.

Required care for aged persons, who because of age and physical disabilities require some type of attention, ranges from domiciliary to complete medical type care, the governor was told.

Heavy Demand on Funds

It was pointed out that many seniles are maintained in nursing homes by the Public Welfare Commission, placing a heavy demand on welfare funds. Some nursing homes hesitate to take in senile patients because they often require more service than a nursing home can offer on the basis of the fee that public welfare can pay.

Dr. Brooks said that because the state hospital is operating at full capacity, a patient must be discharged for every one admitted. He also said that the hospital was in the position of having to admit senile patients for whom they can do nothing while younger persons who are susceptible to treatment cannot be accommodated.

Several years ago a domiciliary type institution for the care of seniles was advocated in the Portland area. However, the final bill passed by the Legislature was for the general mental institution which is being built at Wilsonville.
