 said they expected to have all restored by noon today. No large cables were down or damaged and few poles were reported knocked down. Most phone trouble occurred at Cave Junction where circuits are limited until full service is restored. Officials said telephone line crews were unable to work in the area for some time because of electric hazards.
 Nine Medford street department employees and four men from the water department worked from 6 to 10 p.m. barricading areas where power lines had fallen and setting out warning flares. City Manager Robert Duff said damage through the city was "pretty general."
Audience Loyal
 In Ashland the wind blew a number of fluorescent lighting units from the roof and poles at the Shakespearean festival theater, but these were replaced before curtain time at 8:30 p.m. Part of the wall banners and poles were also blown down, it was said. In spite of the storm, an audience of about 450 persons turned out for a performance of "Cymbeline."

Preliminary and tentative estimates of wind damage in and around Medford was set at up of $20,000 by Dick House, president of the Jackson County Association of Insurance Agents, based on reports from members of the association.
 House said some 400 claims had been filed by mid-morning today, and more are expected during the day. They range all the way from small claims of $5 or $10, up to damage in excess of $100, he said.

One firm has called for additional personnel from other offices to assist local adjusters in inspecting claims. With another storm forecast for this evening, one of the threats is from potential water damage where roofs were ripped by last night's winds, House indicated.
Southern Oregon is scheduled to receive its third electrical storm is as many days this afternoon. Another is predicted for Wednesday.

Last night's storm started about 5:55 p.m., and the roughest part was over by 7 p.m., weather observers said. At 6:15 p.m., a 63-mile-per-hour gust of wind was recorded. Precipitation was only .13 as compared with .19 Sunday night. Wind velocity Sunday night reached 37 miles per hour. During last night's storm, temperature dropped from 82 degrees to 66 degrees and the humidity climbed from 26 per cent to 77 per cent.

'Ike' Sun Visors Useful at Convention

New Try Planned For MacArthur As GOP Candidate
 Washington—(U.P.)—One of the nation's top boosters of Gen. Douglas MacArthur for president made a new try today to reach the Republican National convention with 30,000 campaign buttons before it's "too late."
 Ervin Hohensee, director of MacArthur for President, Inc., had planned to leave for San Francisco Monday night by plane. But he said he didn't go because the Republican National committee couldn't find his seat reservations for the convention.
 He said he planned to leave today as soon as the committee confirmed that convention tickets are waiting for him.
 "May Well Be Year"
 "This may well be the year," he said. "But there's no use going if I don't have any tickets."
 Hohensee said he thinks the convention may be about to "dump" Eisenhower because of his health. He said if the convention did that MacArthur would be the "main contender."
 He said he has not been in touch with the "hero of Bataan" so far this year, but there is "no question he would accept" the presidential nomination.
 And even if President Eisenhower is renominated, Hohensee said he believes MacArthur would be willing to accept the vice presidential nomination to resolve the "Dump Nixon" campaign of Harold E. Stassen.
