bones. It appears to be transmitted through what is called a dominant gene, but there are puzzling cases in which the inheritance does not follow the "rule." It is transmitted from the affected parent to the offspring without skipping generations. When an achondroplastic child is born to normal parents it is thought to be due to what is called a mutation, or a sudden change of a normal gene to a defective one. This accident happens to about one in 44,000 of the population.

Parents of such children write asking if there is any clinic to which they can take the child for treatment, and I have to answer sadly that I know of none. There is no known treatment for the disease. These dwarfs appear to be normal except for the lack of growth in their long bones. They are sturdy and long-lived. When they marry, their children usually show the defect.

Portland, Salem Hotels Lose Money To Gunman. Portland — (U.P.) — A Salem hotel and a Portland hotel were held up yesterday, each for the second time in recent days, and police were wondering if a long-distance gunman was responsible for both.

The Argo hotel in downtown Salem was held up at 12:15 a.m. and the Ockley hotel in downtown Portland was held up at 2:20 a.m. In each case the young gunman reminded his victim.

Expert Says Farmers Neglect Some Erosion. Lexington, Ky. — (U.P.) — While most modern farmers recognize gullies and large silt deposits as trouble that needs attention, they may overlook less obvious signs of erosion, according to a University of Kentucky soil and water conservation expert, Lyle Leonard.

Leonard said that appearance of new stones and gravel on the surface after a field has been cleared is usually a sign that fine soil has washed away. Similarly, while frost heaving may bring small stones to the surface in some areas, if the soil beneath a flat stone is higher than the soil around it, making a little pedestal, it indicates that surrounding soil has washed away.

Further exposure of boulders or bedrock also indicates a lowered soil surface. Occasionally a farmer who hasn't noticed a gradual erosion of his soil will strike with his plow a drain tile that originally was buried deep enough to be safe from damage. Exposed tree roots also show soil washing.
